U. S. Offers Compromise To Greece's 3 Neighbors

Wouldn't Insist On Condemnation If They Abide by U. N. Decision

By Robert Bruskin
Post Reporter

Lake Success, N. Y., Oct. 4.—The United States today offered a small olive branch to the United Nations as a compromise in its accusation that Albania, Yugoslavia and Hungary have been aiding guerillas in Greece.

Herschel V. Johnson, offering the first American gesture of conciliation, said he would not insist that those countries be found guilty by the United Nations of giving assistance and support to the guerillas.

But the compromise, he insisted, was offered only if those three Soviet satellites agreed in advance to abide by recommendations made by the United Nations to stop the warfare.

Milder Phrasing Offered

The United States, Johnson told the political committee, would agree on that basis to a French proposal which tones down the blunt accusation of guilt. The French amendment to the American resolution declares only that a majority of an investigating commission had found they had given aid to the partisans.

Where the American proposal originally called upon them to "cease and desist" from giving further assistance, Johnson said he would accept the milder French request that they "do nothing which may furnish aid and assistance" to the partisans.

Delegates here, however, generally considered it unlikely that the Communist-dominated governments would accept the compromise. Russia has insisted that the Greek government alone is responsible for the fighting and has called for withdrawal of all foreign military personnel in Greece.

The Russians and the three countries have denied that assistance is being given to the partisans. Acceptance of the compromise by them might be construed as admission of some guilt. The Russians are expected to give their answer Monday.

'Concern Is With Future'

Even American delegates shared the belief that the compromise offer would be refused. They remained adamant on insisting that a border commission be reestablished to observe compliance of recommendations by the United Nations. This is also certain to bring Soviet objections.

"Our concern is with the future rather than with the past," explained Johnson. "It is hoped that the already existing moral pressure resulting from the Security Council's work (which sent the investigating commission to Greece) has been sufficient to bring about a change in the attitude of those countries in the future."

The American offer came after pleas for conciliation by Egypt and Colombia.

Dr. Oscar Lange of Poland faithfully echoed the Soviet insistence

Jurors Still Out In Yacht Blast Murder Trial

Santa Ana, Calif., Oct. 4 (AP).—The Overell yacht-blast trial jury was still debating today whether Louise Overell and George Gollum murdered her wealthy parents.

The six men and six women trying the longest murder trial in American history, which started May 26, has made four requests for exhibits and once returned to court to ask Judge Kenneth Morrison about technicalities of grand jury testimony.

During the trial, the defense capitalized on the fact that a prosecution witness, Dr. John J. Montanus, who conducted the original autopsy on the bodies of the victims, Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Overell, admitted he gave false testimony before the grand jury.

As the hours passed today, with no sign that the jurors had reached a verdict, defense lawyers stated privately they felt the State had lost its hope for conviction.

Leftist Motions Fail

U. S. Renounces Italy's Ships; De Gasperi Wins Vote Test

Rome (Sunday) Oct. 5 (AP).—Foreign Minister Carlo Sforza brought the constituent assembly to its feet cheering late last night by making the dramatic announcement, just as a crucial debate on the fate of the government was nearing an end, that the United States had renounced its share of the Italian fleet.

Even Communists reluctantly rose to their feet and joined in the cheering. The prospective distribution of the Italian fleet has been one of the bitterest pills of the peace treaty for Italians.

Shortly after the announcement Leftist motions to oust the Christian Democratic government of Premier Alcide de Gasperi failed with the defeat of two motions of no confidence and the withdrawal of a third.

The Assembly early today beat down one nonconfidence motion by 93 votes and a second by 47 votes.

The first motion was presented by former Foreign Minister Pietro Nenni's pro-Communist Socialists. The vote was 178 for and 271 against. Sixty-three deputies abstained.

The second motion was offered by Giuseppe Saragat's moderate Socialist Labor Party.

Then Palmiro Togliatti, Communist leader, withdrew his party's motion of no confidence, saying that it now would be a "waste of time" to vote on it.

[American officials in Washington said the United States is renouncing title to an Italian battleship and other war vessels awarded under the Italian peace treaty. The battleship and other combat craft must be scrapped and cannot be added to the postwar Italian navy as its composition is fixed in the peace treaty. Italy, however, may keep any auxiliary vessels such as tugs and tankers which are returned. Also she will be saved the cost of putting the combat ships into operating condition before handing them over—a treaty requirement. Officials in Washington said they don't know whether the other Allied powers—Britain, France and Russia—will follow the United States' lead. Editor's note.]

Bitterly Nenni, leftwing Socialist who himself was Foreign Minister up to last January, upbraided Sforza, saying it was "very curious that Sforza makes this announcement today appealing to our patriotic sentiments, when the United States and Britain informed us of this four or five months ago."

Togliatto, attacked the United States as a "warmongering nation," and was interrupted by a Christian Democrat who shouted, "you have rubles."

A dozen Communists rushed forward and blows were exchanged with a Christian Democrat before order was restored.

De Gasperi concluded the debate by excluding any possibility of returning to a coalition government with Communists and Socialists, whom he threw out of his cabinet last May.

"I have lost all faith in the possibility of getting along with the

Greeks Begin Big Attack On Guerillas

2000 Leftists Reported Under Heavy Fire In Thessaly Area

Athens, Greece, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—Military authorities announced today that government planes and artillery-supported troops had launched a large scale attack on 3000 guerillas between Lamia and Larissa in Thessaly.

The announcement said the campaign started from Domokos and another point west of the same town with combined artillery and air attacks.

Press dispatches from Salonika reported that 300 guerillas who swept into the village of Katafyton, near the Bulgarian frontier, were repulsed after a four-hour battle with government forces. Forty-eight houses were set afire, the dispatches added.

At Drama, in Greek Macedonia, an extraordinary court martial imposed death sentences on 14 persons, including four women, who had been charged with aiding guerillas in the Kavalla area, eight others received life imprisonment, 16 were given lesser sentences and 14 were acquitted.

Meanwhile, in Athens, Finance Minister Demetrios Helmis announced that 5000 Greek civil servants would be released October 15 under the reduction program approved by American aid mission officials. Ten thousand more will be released in the following two months, he added.

Radar Helps Liner To Dock at Liverpool

Liverpool, England, Oct. 4 (U.P.). The 20,000-ton liner Empress of Canada today became the first large liner to dock here in heavy fog when it navigated the last few miles of Liverpool's intricate dockside with the aid of radar, arriving only 4 minutes behind schedule.

The liner sailed up the Mersey during the night nad for the last few miles relied entirely on radar. Capt. F. A. Shergold said that the Empress of Canada "would still have been anchored at the bar had we been without radar apparatus."

Congressmen 'Confused' by Sick Europe

Three on Inspection Trip Are Bewildered By World's Sad State

Rome, Oct. 4 (INS).—Three American congressional committee members touring Europe declared in Rome tonight that "It is a sad, sick world, and we ar eutterly confused and bewildered."

All three — Representatives Dewey Short (R., Mo.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee; Lansdale G. Sasscer (D., Md.) and Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.)—hastily added:

"But we should not throw up our hands in despair."

Representative Short declared that "the danger of war does not presently exist, since there is no one able to fight."

Short was emphatic in saying Germany should be rehabilitated because "she is the economic heart of Europe."

Don't Bank on U. S. Aid, Case Advises Europeans

Southampton, England, Oct. 4 (AP).—European nations were advised today by an American Congressman to work as hard as they could and stop "kidding themselves" that financial assistance from the United States under the Marshall proposal was a sure thing.

Completing a 25-day fact-finding tour of Britain and the continent, Representative Francis Case (R., S. Dak.) told newsmen that Secretary of State Marshall never had been authorized by Congress to make any offer of American financial aid to Europe. He added:

"There is no use in them kidding themselves on this matter . . . These countries which are looking for aid would be well advised if they were to do all they could for themselves and not count too much on too much aid from elsewhere."

In a similar declaration yesterday, Representative John Taber (R., N. Y.) said in Berlin that he did "not think people in Europe generally work as hard as they should." Taber is chairman of the House Appropriations Committee. Case also is a member of that committee.

Case sailed on the liner Queen Mary with 18 other members of a

Steelman Presents 4-Point Program For Sound Basis Of Administration

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

The President's Scientific Research Board today proposed a four-point program for putting the Federal Government's scientific activities on a sound administrative basis.

The recommendations are contained in the third volume of a projected five-volume series by the board chairman, Dr. John R. Steelman. They call for:

1. Creation of an Interdepartmental Committee on Scientific Research and Development. It would serve as a general forum of the key Federal officials in charge of research programs. It would have only advisory functions. It would formulate recommendations on research, personnel and administrative policy.

2. Establishment of a special unit in the Budget Bureau to review scientific research and development programs. To promote better performance, it would take the initiative in allocating functions among Federal research agencies.

3. Designation by the President of a White House staff member who would have primary responsibility for liaison. His liaison would be with outside scientists, learned societies, congressional committees and Federal scientific agencies.

4. Establishment of a National Science Foundation. This recommendation is of long standing. Legislation to effectuate it, however, was vetoed last summer by the President, on grounds that the organization it proposed was such as would hinder rather than encourage scientific progress.

Covers 324 Pages

The report, a 324-page book entitled "Administration for Research," is in effect a detailed handbook of the administration and management of the Government scientific activities. These now undertake more than half of the Nation's research.

It provides an analysis of the management and a discussion of key problems which, President Truman said in making the book public, should be studied by outside scientists as well as Federal research agencies.

Among a host of specific internal management recommendations, the report calls for major changes in personnel policy regarding Federally employed scientists.

Among them are recommendations for more "realistic" civil service examinations; raising salaries to a top figure of $15,000 a year; granting sabbatical leaves; wider attendance at scientific meet-

Police Say Girl Died After Being Refused a Kiss

District police and coroner last night joined in investigating the death of a 22-year-old waitress, brought unconscious into Gallinger Hospital early yesterday.

The girl, Mary C. Bolling of 1318 L st. nw., succumbed at 5:10 p. m. without having regained consciousness.

Elmer H. Frye, 30, another lodger of the rooming house, who said he had been "going with" Miss Bolling since last March, said that she came to his room shortly after 1:30 a. m.

After he had told her to "straighten herself up" if she wanted to continue keeping company with him, she asked for a kiss before leaving for her room, he said. On his refusal, she went into the bathroom and on returning said that she had taken something. Alarmed, Frye called police who rushed her to the hospital.

Yanks Gain Series Edge In 2-1 Win

Lavagetto Fails in Hero Role in 9th; Shea Pitches Steady Ball for 2d Victory

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Brooklyn, Oct. 4.—Cookie Lavagetto—the tough Cookie of yesterday—was a soft touch for Pitcher Frank Shea in the ninth inning this afternoon and the Yankees won the pivotal fifth game of the World Series, 2 to 1.

As 34,379 hysterical Brooklyn fans pleaded for a repetition of fourth-game history, Manager Burt Shotton wheeled out Lavagetto as a pinch hitter with two out and the tying run on second base. The scenery was set for a repeat performance by Lavagetto who, the day before, had doubled as a pinch hitter with two out in the ninth to snatch a victory from the Yanks.

Neither history nor Lavagetto repeated. He did work the count to three-and-two, and then he struck out ingloriously on a whistling fast ball into which young Shea bent everything he owned. It was a sweet victory for the Yankees, a revenge piece against Lavagetto, almost as if it had been scripted.

It Was Shea's Day

Again today, the battling went down to the nub in the ninth before the game was won—and lost—and the indisputable hero of the afternoon was the 24-year-old Shea, first-year major leaguer, who is a bonafide Connecticut Yankee, from Naugatuck.

Naugatuck folks can stand up and cheer their Frankie, blow the fire whistles and make the welkin ring, because he put the Dodgers in their place in this World Series—second place, trailing the Yankees, three games to two.

Shea was winning his second game in this series. He held the Dodgers to four hits. The Brooklyn club scarcely outhit Shea, who singled and doubled for two of the Yankees five hits off four Brooklyn pitchers, and drove in one of the precious two runs.

Di Maggio Homers

The second Yankee run, the important one, was the product of Joe Di Maggio's home run bat and represented his second circuit blast into the upper deck of left-center field in Brooklyn. It upped the Yankees' lead to 2-0, and those were the figures the Dodgers were struggling against in the last four innings.

Back to Yankee Stadium the series goes tomorrow for the sixth game that could close out the Dodgers. Manager Bucky Harris of the Yankees is in an envied spot with Allie Reynolds, already a winning nine-inning pitcher in the second game, rested and available, Burt Shotton must scrounge for a starting pitcher.

In lieu of announcement by Shotton as to the identity of his

Irish, Michigan, Texas Win; Navy Bows to Columbia

The second big football Saturday of the season saw several powerhouse teams move to the fore of the national picture.

Texas crushed North Carolina, 34-0; Michigan routed Stanford, 49-13; California handed St. Mary's a 45-6 thrashing; Notre Dame rolled over Pittsburgh, 40-6, and Army continued its undefeated string with a 47-0 victory over Colorado.

Navy dropped a 13-6 decision to Columbia at Annapolis and Virginia's powerhouse ran over VPI, 41-7. In other major contests, Yale downed Cornell, 14-0; Harvard beat Boston University, 19-14; Vanderbilt upset Alabama, 14-7; Northwestern won a thriller from UCLA, 27-26, and Georgia trounced LSU, 35-19.

Fair Crowd Sees 4 Die As 2 Planes Collide

Danbury, Conn., Oct. 4 (U.P.).—Screams of horror rose from thousands of spectators at Danbury Fair today as they watched two small private airplanes collide and plunge to earth, killing all four occupants.

The planes were cruising about 800 feet over Route 6 near the fairgrounds. Each pilot had a woman passenger. All were killed instantly. The pilots were Walter J. O'Neill, Stamford, and Howard C. Dunn, 33, North Stamford. The women were Mrs. H. R. Dowswell, Scarsdale, N. Y., and Mrs. Edith Heydt, mother of two, who was in O'Neill's plane.

The Gallup Poll

MacArthur Trails Truman In Presidential Trial Heat

Incumbent Polls 49 Per Cent; General Draws 37 Per Cent

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 4.—Gen. Douglas MacArthur runs behind President Truman in a political "trial heat" conducted by the Institute.

The great soldier trailed both Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, who were pitted against Mr. Truman in earlier tests.

Americans, the survey showed, are not in the habit of thinking of General MacArthur as a politician. Yet the general has attracted a substantial following of people who would like to see him elected President of the United States. This enthusiastic support continues despite his total disclaimer of presidential aspiration.

The Institute asked a national cross-section of voters:

"If the presidential election were being held today, and MacArthur were running for President on the Republican ticket, against Truman on the Democratic ticket, how do you think you would vote?"

Truman	49%
MacArthur	37
No Opinion	14

When the no opinion vote is excluded, the vote for President Truman is 57 per cent and for MacArthur 43 per cent.

There are several points that should be made in considering the results of Truman-MacArthur "trial heat."

1. As pointed out before, General MacArthur cannot be considered as in the political arena at this time. His latest statement on the subject is a complete denial of any intention to place his five starred cap into the ring.

2. The general has not even been in this country for almost a decade, nor has he made a "triumphal return" to the homeland he defended as have other gener-

Taft Expected To Announce On October 24

Senator Says GOP Will Win Six States He Visited in West

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Chicago, Oct. 4.—Senator Robert A. Taft on or about October 24 will announce his candidacy for the Republican presidential nomination.

This was reliably indicated tonight even though Taft withheld any formal decision until after further talks with Ohio G. O. P. leaders.

In a statement to newsmen taking leave of him here, Taft sidestepped any commitment to run. But he termed his 12,000-mile Western tour "successful" and declared the G. O. P. will carry every one of the six States he stumped. He added:

"Whatever I may decide about becoming a candidate, there is no doubt in my mind Republicans will elect a President in 1948."

Found Labor Law Approval

Before starting for his Cincinnati home late today, Taft indicated personal satisfaction with the results of his tour, despite the noncommittal stand taken by Republicans en route.

"I believe the Republicans appreciate the information I have been able to give them about the record of the Republican Congress and the logical arguments behind the actions which that Congress took," he said.

"I was particularly pleased to find such general and enthusiastic approval of the Taft-Hartley Act. The picketing by extreme leftwing and Communist-inspired unions only emphasized the vigorous support for the law from the general public and from union members themselves.

"I was also pleased at the general reaction to my definition of foreign policy at Tacoma."

Stresses Five Points

Taft again stressed the five points of "constructive" GOP action he has plugged away at in some 100,000 words of speeches in California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Wyoming.

The familiar list: Reduction of Government spending, efforts to cut taxes, curbing "bureaucratic"

Steak Prices Skyrocket Off Computer

Steak prices have gone off the end of the butcher's scales in the District—the high end, that is.

It seems that those computing scales which used to tell the meat man at the store just how much to charge a customer simply cannot keep up with the times.

The scales still register the weight of the precious sirloin, and the computers still figure the total cost of a sale at a given price—but only up to 75 cents a pound, on most computers in Washington.

Relief is in sight, however, as the Toledo Scales Co., one of the country's largest scale manufacturers, announced yesterday the firm has already undertaken a complete new range of scale charts which will compute a customer's bill for prices up to $1.70 a pound—heaven forbid.

Meanwhile, with choice meats above the computer's limitation, the butchers have to brush up on their arithmetic.

"You want to know how we figure steak if it's 76 cents a pound?" asked a local grocery manager yesterday, making sure it was understood that his price was just an example.

"We figure on the computer for 38 cents a pound," he explained, "and then just double it."

For an odd price like 89 cents a pound, he continued, "you have to take what it would cost at 44 cents, then what it would cost at 45 cents, and add the two together."

"It takes a little more time," he observed, "but it comes out the same."

Butter Falls as Women Switch to Margarine

Housewives generally spurned high-priced butter here yesterday in preference for margarine which was reported selling at a record rate.

The steady switch from butter to margarine was marked by a slight drop in butter prices, although that product was still selling in most stores at 85 and 87 cents a pound while margarine sold at half that price. Story on Page 2.

Five Children Hurt by Autos; Two Are in Serious Condition

Five children were injured, two of them seriously, in traffic accidents here yesterday.

Critically injured with possible cerebral hemorrhage and possible fractured skull in Children's Hospital is Alfred J. Johnson, 5, 31 Logan ct. nw.

In serious condition at the same hospital with a compound fracture of the right leg and possible skull fracture is Arthur L. Whitaker, 5, 12 I st. ne.

Police reported Alfred was crossing the street while playing in the 1100 block of 1st st. nw., when he was struck by an automobile driven by Ellis Estes, 24, 1917 Rosedale st. ne. Estes told police he attempted to stop, swerved his car, but could not avoid the accident.

Arthur ran out in front of a parked car, according to police, and was struck by an automobile driven by Harry W. Kimble, 29, 2507 N. 16th st., Arlington, Va.

William H. West, 4, of 12 Dingman's Alley, was taken to Casualty Hospital after he was struck by a truck backing out of a driveway near his home. The driver, Willie A. McCain, 30, 625 2nd st. nw., said he had repeatedly chased several children away from the rear of the truck, but apparently the boy returned. The child is in undetermined condition with possible internal injuries.

At Foote st. ne., between 38th and 39th sts., Rufus O. Mayfield, jr., 2, 633 Kenilworth ave ne., was playing in the street when struck by an automobile driven by Thomas H. Tyson, 21, 315 L st. se., police said. The child suffered abrasions but was released after first aid at Gallinger Hospital.

Yvonne Thomas, 2, 1521 B st. se., was crossing the street near her home when struck, police said, by a truck driven by Gene H. White, 23, 1348 E st. ne. She suffered contusions to the left knee.

Beer Makers To Be Asked Not to Use Wheat, Rice

Leaders to Urge Immediate Release Of Grain Stocks Held by Brewers

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Leaders of the brewing industry yesterday agreed to recommend the immediate elimination of wheat and table-grade rice from use by the Nation's 450 beermakers.

They also agreed to recommend the immediate release for food purposes of all stcoks of wheat owned by the brewers and held under contract to buy. These were estimated at more than 200,000 bushels.

Representatives of the United Brewers Foundation and the Small Brewers Committee thus followed the country's distillers by a day in joining the drive to reduce grain consumption with the twofold objective of feeding Europe and combating high prices at home.

The brewers' action, announced at the White House after a secret, six-hour conference yesterday, was taken at the request of Charles Luckman, chairman of the Citizens Food Committee, and Secretary of Agriculture Anderson.

Further Study Set

Both brewers associations arranged to call meetings of their board of directors this week to study "further conservation measures."

Luckman, meanwhile, said he though that still more could be done by the industry and, accordingly, called another session this week "to formulate a program which will represent the utmost that the brewing industry can possibly and reasonably contribute." He pointed out that brewers use substantial quantities of corn and barley, as well as wheat and rice.

Frank Mason, executive director of the United Brewers Foundation, said the industry representatives could do no more than "recommend" for fear of a brush with the Federal antitrust laws. Any agreement to restrict production which tended to increase prices might, he pointed out, subject the brewers to antitrust action.

Can't Do As Much

Secretary of Agriculture Anderson warned against expecting anything from the brewers like the 50 per cent cut in use of corn, rye and barley announced Friday by the Distilled Spirits Institute. The distillers' organization, representing more than half the industry, agreed to discontinue use of wheat altogether.

Anderson said he did not favor "clamping down" on the brewers, who make the working man's drink, while European nations receiving United States aid continue to make beer for the same purpose. He pointed out that Europe is even exporting some beer, though some of this comes from countries not receiving aid.

Brewers, he said, might substitute less critical grains for wheat, thus curtailing its consumption without too greatly lowering production of beer.

The industry now uses about 10 million bushels of wheat a year, Anderson said, in addition to some 50 to 60 million bushels of rice, barley and corn. He added that by-products from some grains used in brewing make valuable stock feed.

Anderson also called on the Na-

Spending $355,000 Now

Soldiers' Home Plans 10-Million Apartment For 900; Sets Sights at 3500 Total Capacity

Soldiers' Home will look like a giant modern apartment development when expansion plans now in the making are carried through.

Plans call for spending 10 million dollars of the home's trust fund in the 12 months starting next July 1. For that much, the present capacity of the home, about 1550 persons, would be increased by around 900 persons. And that would be the first step in a program designed eventually to boost the capacity to 3500.

With detailed plans still in the making, the Soldiers' Home this year is spending $355,000 for improvements.

Present and future building projects were outlined yesterday by Lieut. Gen. Raymond A. Wheeler, chief of the Army's Corps of Engineers and president of the board of commissioners for the Soldiers Home.

General Wheeler listed these moves in the program of immediate improvements at the home:

Work has been started on new air conditioning for Stanley Hall, the auditorium of the home. The job will cost $30,000.

Laundry facilities are being expanded. The job will cost an estimated $150,000 and another $75,000 will go for equipment.

A new $50,000 incinerator is to be built, and an equal amount is being spent for fire prevention.

The job of drawing up a "master plan" for the home's future expansion has been turned over to the Washington firm of Porter & Lockie, architect-engineers. Congress authorized the home to spend $296,000 for the study.

Included in the 10-million-dollar building program is a residence building to house 850 persons, a new 220-bed hospital building and minor repairs and improvements for existing hospital buildings, a new home for 37 nurses, and a 56-man dormitory for farm personnel.

The present nurses home would be converted into a funeral chapel. The expansion plans also call for enlarging and improving the home's utilities services. Steam is to be used for heating, instead of hot water. The electricity system, now run on direct current with a local generator, will be converted to alternating current, to be bought from the Potomac Electric Power Co.

The first residence unit is to contain dining, auditorium, and other facilities. The proposed new hospital would be the first step toward a hospital capacity of 750. Present capacity is about 330.

The big building program has been approved by the hospital's Board of Commissioners, but must still get Congressional consent. The home's budget is routed through Congress as part of the annual War Department Civil Functions appropriation bill.

Butter Price Aids Sale of Margarine

Most Stores Here Report Demand Is Taxing Supply

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

Margarine is moving on to the dinner tables of the Greater Washington area and the high price of butter is hastening the process.

Margarine wholesalers yesterday reported that they are receiving more orders than they can fill.

The 2-cent-a-pound drop in the price of butter in some Washington chain stores yesterday, reflecting lower wholesale and Washington dairy prices, still left "oleo" with an advantage of more than 50 cents a pound in competing with the dairy product.

Local wholesalers were informed of a 3-cent price drop yesterday, while local dairies' reductions ranged from 2 to 4 or 5 cents. Most chain stores were selling butter at 85 and 87 cents, compared with 87 and 89 the previous week.

Preference Checked

Whether the present spurt in margarine sales will result in a permanent spot on the table for the spread or is merely a temporary popularity brought about by the 50-cent differential in price is hard to predict.

Margarine officials say that almost all persons who overcome the traditional preference for butter and try margarine become fans. Dairy interests declare that when butter prices drop to lower levels, consumers will return to the butter fold.

A spot check of three households in the area revealed the following attitudes:

William B. Haynie of 4317 River rd. nw., head of a family of three, declared: "I have been advocating use of margarine for some time. Frankly I can't tell the difference. We use some margarine, but my wife prefers butter. The present butter price situation is bad."

Mrs. Nick Berbakos of 800 Elder st. nw., said: "I prefer butter. I tried margarine and didn't like it. It feels funny on the roof of my mouth. With a baby and an aged mother in my family I feel we need pure food."

Mrs. William A. Helm of 1083 Jackson st. ne., said that her family of five has tried margarine "and liked it very well." She said she plans "to use more of it."

Advantages Claimed

Chief spokesman for the margarine producers here, Paul T. Truitt, president of the National Association of Margarine Manufacturers, declared that any shortage in supply was only temporary since the industry could increase its production by from 25 to 30 per cent without expansion of present facilities.

Truitt, pointed out these particular mragarine advantages:

1. The price, which has remained consistently lower than butter and fairly stable. Truitt credited this to the formulas by which the spread is made which permit interchange of various food oils, reducing use of high-priced ones in favor of lower cost oils.

2. Vitamin A content, which is marked on the package, and is consistently uniform.

3. Cleanliness, since the spread is untouched by human hands in the processing.

Nutritive Value Claimed

As for claims that margarine is less digestible or has less nutrition value, Truitt's group said that "tests in leading universities have shown margarine to be readily and almost completely digested. The generally accepted coefficient of digestibility of margarine ranges from 95 to 97 per cent—equal to any other table fat."

On nutrition, the Council of Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association has said in an authorized report that when margarine is fortified with Vitamin A (which is now usual procedure) the investigations lead to the conclusion that it can be substituted for butter in the ordinary diet without any nutritional disadvantage."

National figures show a rise from 319 million pounds of margarine sold in 1940 to 540 million pounds in 1946. This year sales will surpass the 1946 figure by about 120 million pounds, Truitt estimated.

Moving Well Here

In the District, distributors gave the following supply, demand and price picture:

Carpel Frosted Foods, Inc.—"Not getting as much as we can sell . . . Is moving well . . . Price is relatively stable."

Good Brothers—"Sales are very good. We could sell more if we had it . . . Sales have been on a steady upward curve with an increase of 100 per cent in three months . . . Price stable."

Armour & Co.—"Moving very good . . . Big switch from butter to margarine . . . Our butter sales have slowed up."

Swift & Co.—"We have had a shortage of table margarine since the war years. Many have never tried it before and are now sticking with it . . . Price is fairly stable."

Cudahy Packing Co.—"Sales are very good—gradual rise at first, which gathered momentum. We could sell more if we could get it. Margarine has a very good repeat record."

Margarine's principal handicaps, besides the tradition of butter being used on the table, are the Federal and State taxes levied on its manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers. Most of the State taxes have now been withdrawn, but manufacturers still must pay an annual license fee of $600, wholesalers must pay a license fee of $480 a year for selling colored margarine or $200 a year on uncolored margarine, and grocers who pay $48 a year license to sell colored and $6 for selling uncolored.

These taxes, which total 10 cents on colored margarine and ¼ cent on uncolored, have remained mainly at the behest of the dairy industry, which fears the substitution of colored margarine for butter.

Isolate Mukden

China Reds Cut Railway In New Push

Peiping, Oct. 4 (AP).—The Communists smashed the all important Peiping-Mukden railway at many points, and skirmished within 10 miles of Changchun today, gaining sharp advantages in the opening phases of the new campaign for Manchuria.

Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek flew to Peiping to direct the defense. Accompanied by his wife and personal guard commander, Lieut. Gen. Yu Chi-Shih, he was expected to stay two or three days.

Mukden, south Manchurian metropolis, was cut off from China proper except by air. Mukden dispatches said panicky civilians were bidding astronomical prices for plane tickets south.

Press reports quoting government officers conceded that there was no early prospect of restoring train service, and that the seaports of Hulutao and Yingkow were virtually immobilized by the Communists' approach.

The Communist radio said the Peiping-Mukden line was "thoroughly destroyed" for 30 miles in the vicinity of the Great Wall.

tion to plant "20 million freedom gardens" next year.

"The produce from these gardens," he said, "can take the place of many foods vitally needed for export. By helping himself to meet increased living costs, the home gardener will be helping his own community to make a precious contribution to a hungry world."

While his food committee was in conference with the brewers, President Truman worked on his broadcast, scheduled for tonight, in which he will launch a nationwide voluntary food-saving campaign. The broadcast will originate from the White House at 10:30 p. m. and will continue for 30 minutes.

On the program with the President will be Anderson, Luckman, Secretary of State Marshall and Commerce Secretary Harriman. Marshall will be cut in from the home of Undersecretary of State Robert A. Lovett at Locust Valley, N. Y., where he is visiting.

It will be the first White House broadcast ever televised and efforts will be made to bring in brief television studies of children in the countries of Europe threatened with famine.

A spokesman for the food committee said food-saving suggestions more specific than those announced last week in a five-point program would be made. The five-point program included: (1) Buy cheaper cuts; (2) Don't serve too much; (3) Don't overcook meat; (4) Use leftovers; (5) Save wheat by sparing use of poultry, eggs, butter and cheese.

Nation-wide reports yesterday indicated that a combination of circumstances had achieved slight reductions in prices of some foodstuffs, though meat prices continued upward at Chicago, where hogs set an all-time high.

In many cities, retail butter sales slumped sharply as a result of an apparent buyers' strike and wholesale butter prices declined in sympathy. Grains at Chicago fell several points at news of the distillers' move to cut purchases and a private crop report noting an improvement in corn prospects.

From at least two sources came unfavorable reaction to some of the many suggestions for saving food and holding down prices which been advanced recently. At Chicago, J. O. McClintock, president of the Chicago Board of Trade, charged that proposals of increased credit margins on grain buying "assumes a punitive and discriminatory character." He said a recommendation to that effect by Commerce Secretary Harriman's Committee on Foreign Aid was "ill-advised and a premature conclusion that margins are related to the price situation."

Also at Chicago the American Meat Institute declared the Government's program to feed less grain to livestock might "fan the price-inflation fire." A statement by the institute, which represents the Nation's meat packers, said "meatless days" had proved themselves worthless as a means of saving meat and a "created scarcity" would serve only to bring more criticism of high prices.

Clerics Find Europe Spawning Third War, Ditching Morality

By The Associated Press

One of a group of American clergymen just back from a European inspection trip said yesterday a "third world war" may be in the making.

It was also reported that chaos in Germany has ditched all sex morality with resultant evil effect on young American occupation soldiers.

Fourteen clergymen made the trip. The Army released the reports it received from the first four. They were written by Dr. George Pitt Beers, executive secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission and chairman of the Council of World Evangelization, Northern Baptist Convention; Dr. Alfred Carpenter, director of the chaplains commission, Southern Baptist Convention; Dr. W. O. H. Garman, director of civil affairs of the American Council of Christian Churches, and Dr. Harold J. Ockenga, pastor of the Park Street Congregational Church of Boston.

Cites Reds' Confusion Tactics

The refusal of Russia to cooperate was noted generally in the reports, and was emphasized by Dr. Ockenga. He asserted that "from the stalemate tactics of the Russians, it is obvious that the Communists seek a disorganized, confused, poverty-stricken Germany, on which communism breeds." The Marshall Plan is "an effective countermeasure to this threat," said Dr. Ockenga. Then he added:

"Nevertheless it has drawn the lines of division between eastern and western Europe which may well lead to a third war. Either we must retreat from the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan or we must be prepared to implement these words with force, if needed.

"The United States forces in Europe are pitiably weak. Statesmen, generals and civilians know that in any showdown Russia could occupy Europe in a week. If France has an atom pile, Russia may have also. To allow the possibility of Russia's being on the Atlantic and the possibility of some 200,000 to 250,000 Americans in Europe to become hostages is extremely short-sighted.

Many Temptations for GI's

To meet this threat America must have adequate military forces. Build our defenses by having two or three adequate operational forces strategically located in Europe and enlisting with greater incentive for longer periods."

Dr. Garman contended that Russian policy is to make the people of Europe poorer and poorer to foster revolution. He asserted that "personally, I expect to see this situation boomerang in Russia. It did on Hitler. The oppressed masses of Europe, mindful that Russia is most responsible for their continued misery, may turn upon the Communists and destroy them."

The clergymen generally deplored the moral temptations to which immature American troops are exposed in Europe.

Dr. Beers said that 'the extent of the use of alcohol is appalling" and that the rate of venereal disease "is fraught with evil consequences for the future of America." He said the average age of troops in one regiment was 19 years.

253 Colored Babies in Town

Dr. Ockenga said that in order to get food, clothing and shelter, "the German will sell his soul." He asserted:

Sex morality does not exist. For a few candy bars, a can of coffee or some cigarettes, most women are ready to sell their bodies. Soldiers, white and colored, have whom they please. In Giessen alone there are 253 colored babies of white mothers, according to the highest military authority in Hesse.

"The process did not begin with our troops. It was fostered and abetted by the Nazis during the war. The full effect may now be seen everywhere. 'Shacking up' is general."

(Shacking up, in GI language, is living with a woman.)

Communism No Peril Here, Prelate Says

By V. R. Montanari
Post Reporter

Communism is a much lesser danger in the United States than in South America because of our "much sounder economic basis" and the better organization of the Catholic church anad laity here, a Brazilian cardinal said yesterday.

He is Carlo Camillo, Cardinal de Vasconsellos Motta, of Sao Paulo, Brazil, who is visiting this country for the first time. He will preside at a solemn high mass at 10 a. m. today in St. Matthew's Cathedral, to be attended by the Brazilian Ambassador and members of the Embassy staff.

The Cardinal declared that doctrinally, or spiritually, the threat of Communism is the same everywhere, but socially, it can be more or less pronounced, depending on the stage of development reached by any particular area.

Not only is the Catholic Church here better organized than in his country, Cardinal Motta told a reporter through an interpreter, but he is also impressed with the spiritual organization of the Catholic laity here. His interpreter was Frederick Hall, who has served with the National Catholic Welfare Confeernce in Brazil for eight years. Also accompanying the Cardinal was his secretary, the Rev. Enzo Gusso.

The visiting prelate is a guest at the House of Studies of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, 391 Michigan ave. ne. A number of priests from the Oblate order are established in mission foundations in his Sao Paulo diocese, which has some two million Catholics in its 100 square miles.

The spirit and practice of Pan-Americanism should "always be increased and amplified," the cardinal said. "Unity of spirit should follow our geographical unity, and our common general pattern of Christian civilization should be a bond between our countries. Also, our economic and material interests should be a bond between our countries. Also, our economic and material interests should bring us together on a lesser plane."

The cardinal, who toured Washington yesterday, said he was "deeply moved by the beauty of the city and the splendor of the public and religious buildings here." He was greeted at the house of studies by the Most Rev. Arsene Turquetil, OMI, retired bishop of the Vicariate of Hudson Bay, which includes all the Arctic region of this continent; the Rev. Leo G. Burke, OMI, acting superior, and the Rev. J. T. McDermott of the oblate fathers.

The cardinal leaves tomorrow to visit Notre Dame University.

Red Trainees Outside Ken of U. S. Agencies

Two Government agencies informed Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) yesterday that they had no idea how many Russian "trainees" were in the United States or what they were doing here.

The State Department and the Department of Justice furnished this information in reply to charges by Ferguson that a number of such "technical trainees" had "disappeared."

Immigration Commissioner Watson Miller said he would try to throw some light on the matter. It was made clear, however, that the Russians in question had entered not as immigrants but as "officials" and that so long as their entry visas were good, the Government was not required to check on their actions or their whereabouts.

They were admitted to study operation and equipment of industrial machinery purchased here for installation in Russian plants.

"This thing must stop," Ferguson declared. "Nobody, so far as I know, keeps track of them after entry.

"Nobody knows where these people are or what they are doing. We should close down on this kind of thing unless our representatives are permitted to examine Russian production and industries."

His sentiments were echoed by Chairman Eaton (R., N. J.) of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, who asked:

"Does Moscow expect this Government to continue to admit Russian 'diplomats' and Russian agents in unlimited numbers, with the free run of our country and its whole industrial system?

"A little reciprocity seems to me to be indicated, and I feel certain Congress will give this matter early consideration, especially in view of the fact that only 165 Americans are now in Russia as compared with 1541 Russians admitted to America in 1947.

"We have been going beyond an 'open door' policy; what we have been giving Russia is the 'open arms' policy. What we are getting in return is this kind of 'straight-arm' offensive for our pains."

Sees Reds' Purpose Revealed

He referred to the recent Russian action in denying visas to a congressional committee which sought to inspect the United States Embassy at Moscow.

But, Eaton said, he welcomed continuance of this "straight-arm offensive" as revealing the Soviets' real purpose. Continuance of the present Russian policy of criticizing everything American, he said, would help to "force on even the most peaceful people the nature of the struggle to save a free world upon which we are now engaged."

Ferguson's blast at U. S. admission of Russian "trainees" was inspired by a protest from Local 468 of the CIO-United Auto Workers that Russians at the Clark Equipment Co., at Buchanan, Mich., were displacing its members. The union asked for a congressional investigation.

Walter H. Schirmer, vice president of the company, said there was no mystery about the whereabouts of "officials" assigned to study at his plant. He said the trainees "come and go as they please" and all were "accounted for" when the plant closed for the weekend Friday. He said there were usually "seven or eight" Russians at the plant but "not always the same ones."

In immigration spokesman at Detroit explained that the Clark company had been training Russian technicians in batches of 4 to 20 since June. Some of them, he said, had gone back to Russia and had been replaced by others.

Javits Urges Caution In Marshall Plan Aid

Paris, Oct. 4—Representative Jacob K. Javits (R., N. Y.) said today that Europe "desperately needed" Marshall Plan aid but "the threat of the continent going Communist must not scare the United States into doing something unwise and uneconomic."

The Manhattan Congressman said continental economics were "out of gear with the new production-efficiency standards."

Javits explained that Europe "is too small to have so many economic sovereignties, and when I say that I don't mean necessarily a customs union but at least a customs understanding. The 16 countries petitioning for American assistance must rid themselves of their old protectionist practices in order to survive as a unit in the world's new productivity."

special House committee on foreign aid headed by Representative Christian A. Herter (R., Mass.).

Case said that when British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin "grabbed with both hands (at the Marshall proposal) he apparently succeeded in giving a picture which is not warranted when you know the way in which the United States actually does take action.

"Whether Mr. Bevin intended it that way, he succeeded in putting the United States on the spot," Case said.

Referring to the congressional committees investigating conditions in Europe, he said:

"While I think Congress will give careful and even sympathetic consideration to conditions that will be reported by these various committees it should be elemental that an elected Congress is not going to appropriate funds and levy taxes in the United States to establish conditions in other countries on levels better, in some instances, than at home or higher than prewar levels abroad."

Case said the United States was in a different position in Germany and Austria, since, as an occupying power, "she is responsible under international law."

Soviet-Sponsored Vienna Meeting Turns Anti-U.S.

Vienna, Oct. 4 (AP).—Speakers from the United States, Britain and Austria attacked the so-called Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan today as a one-day rally of the Russian-sponsored "Free Austrian Youth" organization turned into an anti-American mass meeting.

One, introduced as Vincent Pierri, American delegate to the "World Federation of Democratic Youth," in Prague, told 20,000 persons in historic Rathaus Square, "I am ashamed of America. Several years ago my country fought against fascism, but now we have been taken over by Truman and Marshall."

Pierri refused to divulge his home address to newsmen after his speech.

A woman speaker introduced as Doris Hochheim of Britain said, "The World Federation of Democratic Youth is backing you against outrageous and ruthless American oppression."

Greek Rebels Fear Reds, Says Loy Henderson

By The Associated Press

An estimate that 60 per cent of the Greek guerillas would surrender but for fear of their Communist leaders came last night from Loy Henderson, State Department policy maker just back from Athens.

Henderson, who had a hand in settling last month's Greek cabinet crisis, said fanaticism of a "hard core" of Communists plus support from across the Balkan frontiers explains how the Reds are able to continue fomenting disorder.

"Foreign assistance has been on such a scale," he said, "that it is estimated by an American observer that if the northern Greek frontiers could be sealed and the flow of supplies stopped, guerilla activity in Greece may well be decreased by at least half within the space of one month."

Henderson, director of the State Department's Office of Near Eastern and African Affairs, reported on Greece in an address prepared for the Wellesley Club here.

He said official American information indicates that the Communists and their "convinced" followers probably did not make up more than 30 to 40 per cent of the 20,000 to 30,000 guerillas.

Red Hits Speech By Mrs. Roosevelt

Wally Won't Wear 'Em Any Longer

THE DUCHESS OF WINDSOR, perennially one of the world's best-dressed women, said yesterday in Paris that she would not wear her skirts longer. "I have not changed the length of my skirt and what is more I tive Baltimore-born wife of the do not intend to," the attrac-former King of Britain told a United Press staff correspondent. Some experienced observers looking at this photograph said her skirt is already quite long. She wore it last April at the Maryland Hunt Club Steeplechase at Glyndon

U. N. Delegate Calls Arguments Against Russia 'Reactionary'

Lake Success, N. Y., Oct. 4 (U.P.).—Russia today accused Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt of using "superficial" and "reactionary" arguments against a Soviet move to get United Nations action in its campaign against "warmongers" in the United States press.

Soviet Delegate Valerian A. Zorin, in a long tirade carrying forward Andrei Vishinsky's fight against American newspapers, declared that the points "stated quite bravely" by Mrs. Roosevelt "do not correspond to reality."

The Soviet proposal would add to the agenda of next spring's Geneva conference on freedom of information the question of press "warmongering."

"Exposure" of Fascism

It also would include "the exposure of fascism" as one of the basic objectives of a free press.

Britain, France and China spearheaded a fresh wave of opposition to the Russian resolution.

Zorin said he regretted that he had to deal with "such a superficial argument" as Mrs. Roosevelt's contention that adoption of Soviet ideas on press freedom would be "like using the color black to describe the color white." He charged that many of Mrs. Roosevelt's statements reflected "reactionary" views.

"Why," Zorin asked, "does Mrs. Roosevelt object to every word in the agenda that would include a reference to the fight against fascism as a fundamental press freedom?"

He punctuated his attack on Mrs. Roosevelt with a reference to her late husband as the "great President of the United States," saying that Franklin D. Roosevelt signed at Yalta "in black and white" a declaration of the people's rights."

"Perhaps," he added sharply, "The views of the United States delegation today are not in keeping with such a declaration. If so, let them say so."

Ridicules Arguments

Ridiculing arguments that anyone in the United States can publish a newspaper, Zorin said Pittsburgh did not have a single newspaper owned by local residents. Most news items appearing in the steel capital, he said, "are made up and selected right here in New York."

British delegate, E. Davies, criticizing the Russian press, said that "to drive the opposition to cover is the first step to the police state." Once a nation denies a fundamental freedom to certain categories of the population, he argued, other sectors of the community become fearful of expressing their opinions, and go underground.

French delegate, Raymond Offroy, attacked the Russian proposal as a political matter, beyond the competence of the social committee. The Ukraine delegated replied with full support for the Russian move, and repeated many of the Soviet's criticism of American newspapers.

London, Oct. .(AP).—A broker sauntered into the automatic exclusive London Exchange wearing a plum-red suit.

His ruffled colleagues quickly whipped off his jacket. His tie and collar went next. When he tried to escape, he was held and forced to buy the jacket back at a mock auction.

Said one top-hatted broker: "Some members have been asking for it for some time. Many are wearing suits too loud for the city."

U. N. Assembly May Hold Its 1948 Meeting in Geneva

Lake Success, L. I., Oct. 4.—A suggestion that the United Nations hold its 1948 general assembly meeting in Europe, possibly in Geneva, Switzerland, was made her etoday. It was warmly supported by several European nations.

Gunnar Hagglof, of Sweden, asked the assembly's administrative and budgetary committee to consider whether it would be "worth while" to hold the next plenary meeting in Geneva, seat of the now defunct league of nations. He asked for a detailed study of the expenditures which would be involved.

The Swedish suggestion drew immediate support from France, Belgium and Russia. No one spoke against it at this early stage.

Few Signs of Reds Are Found In Russian Zone of Austria

By Charles Bernard

Vienna, Austria, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—Red Banners, Communist billboards and "victory" portraits of Stalin and other Russian leaders that reportedly covered the countryside less than a year ago have all but disappeared from the Soviet occupation zone of Austria.

If the Russians ever entertained the idea of sovietizing their zone, a conducted tour failed to show any sign of it.

Our trip, conducted by and at the invitation of two Tass (Russian) agency correspondents, was more a sightseeing tour than one of inspection. Although it was not possible to gather conclusive inofrmation as we drove through cities, towns and the countrysdie, the impression was inescapable that the Rusians could pull out tomorrow and little would be left behind to remind Austrians of the occupation.

The Soviet zone loked neither better nor worse than the people in Vienna, Salzburg, Innsbruck or Klagenfurt, the latter three in the American ,French and British occupation zones respectively.

In sidewalk conversations with Austrians in the Soviet zone—both within and outside the hearing of our Russian guides—they expressed no special bitterness toward the Soviets. They sneered openly at suggestions that the Communisst might gain political control in their zone.

According to straw vote my companion correspondent and I kept, this section of the country more towards the Socialists, politically. One house painter said that "Socialists talk the workers' language and at the same time act like Austrians."

Almost as scarce as Stalin's portrait was the sight of Russian uniforms. It was only when we sought out Soviet headquarters in Weiner neustadt, second largest city in the zone, that we saw more than two or three Russian soldiers at one time.

The local commander, Maj. Igor Kopilkin, 33-year-old professional soldier, said he had little to do with Austrian affairs except when the local burmeister came to him for help.

Kopilkin said his biggest occupation headache was caring for Russian army dependents who seem to need things and get homesick much the same as dependents in the other occupation zones.

Rudolf Wehrl, the burgomeister, confirmed Gopilkin's statement later. The Russians gave him few problems, he said, except on requisitioning of property.

Our Russian escorts promised that on anothtr trip soon we would be taken to the Zistersdorff oil fields and other points of economic interest. We did not see any Soviet-operated industries on this tour.

Saar Votes Today On Parliament

Saarbruecken, Germany, Oct. 4 (AP).—Residents of the German-speaking Saar vote tomorrow to elect a Parliament of 50 deputies in what is expected to be the first step in joining this coal mining region economically with France.

A vote for any political party, except the Communist, will in effect constitute a vote for economic union with France. The Parliament to be elected in the balloting is expected to convene later this month.

It then will be handed a ready-made draft constitution providing for the economic attachment. This proposed constitution was drawn up with the help of French occupation authorities by representatives of all Saarland parties who were chosen according to strength shown in the municipal elections of September, 1946.

French officials have said the Parliament will be free to adopt, amend or completely rewrite the draft.

Dr. A. C. Christie With Head Group For Chest Survey

Dr. Christie

Dr. A. C. Christie, a specialist in X-ray diagnosis, will head the medical-technical committee of the Washington Chest X-Ray Survey when it begins early next year.

Acceptance of Dr. Christie was announced yesterday by William E. Leahy, chairman of the 80-member citizens committee which will conduct the survey. Dr. Christie is a member of the firm of Drs. Groover, Christie & Merritt. He has been president of the American Rontgen Ray Society and the American College of Radiology, as well as the Medical Society of the District of Columbia.

During World War II, Dr. Christie served on the Committee on Radiology of the National Research Council, which read the chest film of all recruits from the District during the war.

Sun Boss Wins Farmington Show Honor

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 4.—At the second day of the Farmington Hunt Club Show, one champion award was decided, the Green Hunter Trophy going to the chestnut gelding Sun Boss, owned by Mrs. Raymond J. Barbin of Keswick.

The reserve ribbon was pinned on the bay gelding Moonlight Bay, from the Springsbury Stables of Mr. and Mrs. George P. Greenhalgh, Berryville.

In the lead for the conformation hunter championship is Mr. and Mrs. John T. Maloney's bay gelding Substitution, with 10½ points. Next, with eight points each, are Octebony, from the Mile-a-Way Stables of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Moss, Southern Pines, N. C., and Icecapade, owned by Mrs. Page Jennings of Charlottesville.

Nineteen classes were shown today. The exhibition will close at a matinee tomorrow, with 10 classes listed, in addition to four other championship awards.

No Violence

2400 Jews Embarked For Cyprus

Jerusalem, Palestine, Oct. 4 (U.P.). Twenty-four hundred Jewish illegal immigrants sailed from Haifa for detention camps in Cyprus without violence today as a heavy force of British troops guarded the north Palestine port.

Seven hundred passengers of the captured steamer Paducah—renamed Redemption—were embarked at 12:30 p. m. aboard the transports Empire Rest and Empire Comfort to join 800 of their fellow refugees previously shipped to the island.

Another 1700 refugees, captured aboard the steamer Northland—known to the Jews as the Jewish State—sailed tonight aboard the 5000-ton LST Snowden Smith. Plans to load them aboard one or more of the three transports—Runnymede Park, Ocean Vigour and Empire Rival—which carried the Exodus 1947 refugees to Hamburg, Germany, were abandoned at the last moment.

Some Still in Haifa

Still in Haifa awaiting shipment were 250 refugees from the Northland.

Through the day, heavy concentrations of troops turned the Haifa port area into a virtual armed camp. Additional detachments guarded the radar installations on the slopes of Mount Carmel, which are a favorite target of sabotage attempts.

British precautions were redoubled because the Haganah underground organization mobilized its forces yesterday to guard against possible violence during the one-day Arab general strike against proposals to partition Palestine. It was believed that the underground might attempt some retaliation for the deportation of 3500 refugees captured earlier this week.

Truck Breaks Down

In Tel Aviv today, a truck breakdown thwarted what apparently would have been the year's third attempt to blow up British army headquarters there. Several armed Jews abandoned the stalled truck, which was found to contain a load of arms, ammunitions and explosives.

One of the Jews returned long enough to place a sign saying "Danger—Mines" on the truck, and then ran off.

A British arms experts in armored cars investigated the truck, but left it where it stood. It was believed that it would be blown up on the spot.

Two more transports—converted landing ships—were expected to reach Haifa today from Egypt, bringing the total shipping available for the Haifa-Cyprus trip to a new high. The British Navy seems to be preparing to handle a record number of refugees, possibly in anticipation of the arrival of two more immigrant ships believed to be at large in the eastern Mediterranean.

U. S. Proffers Olive Branch

that foreign military aid and political intervention was the cause of the "civil war." The aid which Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Albania are alleged to have given to Greek guerillas, he said, is an "anticlimax" to the intervention of British troops and American financial aid.

Evidence given to the investigation commission came largely from Greek government witnesses who, he said, were criminals, quislings and others of similar character.

China Supports U. S.

Dr. T. F. Tsiang of China, supporting the original American proposal, declared that Greece presents an "ideological conflict inspiring an armed conflict."

"One type of conflict is as bad as the other type," he said. "When the two coalesce, they create a crisis of the most dangerous kind.

"It is not true that the world must be divided between capitalism and communism. Within both . . . there is variety . . . and we are grateful for that. We must learn to respect what we might call the sovereign equality of ideologies."

Support for the original American resolution was also given by Dr. Ricardo Fournier of Costa Rica.

Britain to Withdraw Troops From Japan

London, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—Authoritatives quarters said today that Britain "shortly" will withdraw its force of several hundred occupation troops from Japan.

Most of the troops are assigned to administrative units, these sources said, emphasizing that the withdrawal is a relatively small-scale operation. They added that it was part of the overall troop reduction program to conserve dollars.

Labor Building Up Totalitarian Rule, He Tells His Party

Brighton, England, Oct. 4 (AP).—Winston Churchill today demanded an early national election which he said would destroy the Labor government.

Addressing a cheering Conservative Party convention at its closing session, the wartime Prime Minister delivered a sharp attack on the Labor government, declaring "the machinery for the totalitarian grip on British society is being built up and perfected."

He advised the Conservatives to be ready for an election contest "at any time this year or next," adding that Prime Minister Attlee "has no moral right to deny the electorate a free expression of their will at an early date."

The Labor majority in Parliament was elected in 1945 for a five-year term, but the government may call a general election at any time.

Ripe For Communism

Churchill spoke after the convention had adopted by a large majority a resolution to fight "subversive and antidemocratic activity in this country, whether Communist or Fascist."

A Nottingham Conservative, Anthony Gorman, speaking for the resolution, declared the country had been made "more ripe for communism than ever before in history."

He asserted there were 40 left-wing Laborites in Parliament who were "fellow travelers" with Communists, that many Labor Party leaders were "tied up" with communism and "there is communism in every level of the trade unions from Arthur Horner (Communist secretary of the National Union of Mine Workers) at the top, to the workers at the bottom."

He declared Communists "desire to see Britain a broken country," and the recent coal strike was a "dress rehearsal for a general strike."

Warns of Totalitarianism

Churchill told the delegates that the economic crisis "will not be mastered except by the election of a new House of Commons.

"They (the government) make mistakes which make things worse," he continued. "As things get worse they claim more power to set them right. Thus they move ever nearer to the scheme of the all-powerful totalitarian state in which the individual is a helpless serf or pawn.

"We have every reason to believe that the Socialist government, which even in the hour of its triumph, did not represent a majority of the electorate, is now a substantial minority, and is ruling without the support and against the wishes of the large part of the nation."

Indian Bloodshed Cited

The former Prime Minister devoted his address almost entirely to home affairs, but recalled his former forecast of "blood and misery" from government moves to grant Indian independence and said "Alas, I was not wrong. You can judge for yourselves how far this forecast has already been fulfilled . . . It is not possible at this moment for us to do anything to stop the avalanche which has been unloosed. Things are what they are and their consequences will be what they will be."

He said the Conservatives had given strong support to Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin's conduct of foreign affairs "especially in maintaining that close and fraternal association with the United States upon which the peace and safety of the modern world depends."

He renewed his support for a "United Europe" and the imperial preference trading system and called for British withdrawal from Palestine and reduction of occupation expenses in Germany.

He urged a "review" of large-scale government buying of food and raw materials with a view to the "due restoration of private trading practices," the cutting of government expenses and elimination of many government controls.

Cripps Fails to Return Churchill Compliment

London, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—Sir Stafford Cripps, Britain's new Minister for Economics Affairs, told a meeting at Cardiff, Wales, today that the Labor Party should be able to maintain its majority "so long as Mr. Churchill will continue making an occasional speech."

U.S. Renounces Italian Ships

leftists in the government," he declared.

He charged the Communists with waging a continuous campaign of strike against his rule, asserting there had been 2617 strikes in Italy since June.

A United States Embassy official said it was not correct that the United States and Britain had decided to refuse their share of the ships "three or four months ago."

The official pointed out that the protocol setting up a four-power commission to execute the naval clause of the treaty permits any power to refuse its share.

Recent Ratification

Under the treaty ratified less than a month ago, Italy was allowed to keep two old 1912 battleships, four cruisers, four destroyers and a number of minor units, and was compelled to surrender 19 warships and several score smaller craft to a pool controlled by Britain, the United States, Russia and France.

The four powers never have carried out the division of the pool, however, because of failure of the Soviet representative to show up as yet to a meeting of the naval commission in Rome.

United States renunciation of its share of the Italian war fleet was a second major concession to Italy in recent months. On August 14 the United States announced the cancellation of a one-billion-dollar debt owed by Italy, including 523 million dollars for relief supplies furnished by the Army, and the return of 23 merchant ships or their equivalent seized from Italy during the war.

Sforza spoke with difficulty amidst Communist interruption. He said he hoped the United States action would be "an example to other states" allotted warships by the treaty.

Meanwhile, a threat of a general strike that had hovered over Rome Province since groups of peasants had demanded the distribution of uncultivated estates was temporarily dispelled. Peasant and landover representatives agreed to turn settlement of their differences over to four special committees which are to work out decisions within eight days.

Wife Ill, Reports Franklin Roosevelt, Jr.

Glen Cove, N. Y., Oct. 4 (AP).—Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., said today his wife, the former Ethel du Pont, was ill with virus pneumonia but "her condition is satisfactory." Roosevelt said his wife had been a patient in the North Country Community Hospital here since Sept. 30.

First Soldier Dead Sail Home From Antwerp

Antwerp, Belgium, Oct. 4 (AP).—Thousands of Belgians joined with American officials today in tribute to 5600 American soldier dead who sailed for home aboard the United States Army transport Joseph V. Connolly.

The crowds massed in the grand plaza to honor the first homing contingent of soldier dead whose return was requested by their families. Names were not announced. The transport is scheduled to arrive at New York about October 25.

Gen. Lucius D. Clay, American military governor in Germany, stood before a coffin of one of the soldiers anonymously chosen, and declared "we have not yet found the lasting peace for which these men died in their youth."

He said "we must determine that free men everywhere should stand together in solid front to insure a world in which there is a lasting peace, in which the dignity of the individual is recognized and maintained. Only then will be have fulfilled our debt to these men."

Robert Grillon, president of the Belgian Senate and official represenntative of his government, said farewell to "those who sacrificed themselves for the triumph of liberty" and pledged that his country would care for the graves of those who remain "as if their tombs were our children's."

Brig. Gen. Howard L. Peckham of the American Graves Registration Command introduced the speakers. After prayers by Army chaplains of the Jewish, Protestant and Roman Catholic faiths, the speakers laid wreaths at the foot of a catafalque in the center of the flag-adorned square.

An infantry squad fired the traditional three volleys and Army Buglers sounded taps.

Then military pallbearers lifted the single casket from the catafalque to a caisson. Flanked by a Belgian and American guard of honor, and with officials of the two countries forming a puneral cortege, the coffin was borne to the transport, which was decked with wreaths and garlands.

Above, 24 Thunderbolts from the Army Air Forces in Germany circled the city. The transport moved out under escort of Belgian tugs and the U. S. Navy destroyer Vesole.

The transport will stop in Argentia, Newfoundland, where an additional 600 American dead will be taken aboard.

Memorial services for the soldier dead were held elsewhere in Western Europe coincident with the sailing.

Skipper Ends Life, Brooding on Crash

San Francisco, Oct. 4 (AP). —Capt. Joseph A. Gaidsick, 58, an American-Hawaiian Lines skipper whose ship was in a Puget Sound collision two months ago, hanged himself from a bulkhead aboard the Sea Devil at its moorings last night, police reported.

Deputy Coroner Ray Brooks said Captain Gaidsick was to appear soon before a Maritime Commission hearing into the August 13 crash. The American-Hawaiian company had absolved Gaidsick of blame, but he had brooded over it. He was in command of the Fenn Victory when it collided with the freighter Diamond Knot.

U. S. Troops to Leave Italy by December 2

Leghorn, Italy, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—A United States Army spokesman said today that evacuation of American troops from Italy will begin next week and should be completed by December 2.

The shipping schedule calls for 6070 officers, enlisted men and dependents to go from Leghorn to New York. The spokesman said that only a small detachment in Trieste free territory and a graves registration unit in Italy will remain after December 15.

Canada Government To Build Housing

Ottawa, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—The federal government will shortly announce a house program in which it will itself go into the house-building business, it was learned reliably today. The announcement is expected to be made Wednesday.

Details are a closely guarded secret and may be open to amendment, but it is understood the program will be all-embracing and designed to lift Canada's house-building efforts out of the doldrums.

Dominican Plot Crazy, Leader Says

Rodriguez GarciaBelieves Preparation For Abortive Expedition Took Too Long

Havana, Cuba, Oct. 4 (AP).—Juan Rodriguez Garcia, who organized the abortive expedition against the Dominican Republic, said today it failed because it was formed by "99¾ per cent of lunatics against ¼ per cent of sane people."

The 60-year-old Rodriguez said failure could also be attributed to the preparations taking too long. He related his views in an interview at the military hospital, where he is being held prisoner with his son, Horacio, 28.

He said he had invested all his money in the attempt to overthrow the regime of Dominican President Rafael Trujillo.

"Naturally," he added, "many Cuban friends and those of other nations also contributed money for the expedition's expense, but it is not the truth that any government had officially financed the movement."

Action Is Studied

The Cuban Supreme Court is deliberating what action to take against members of the 1,097-man expedition. Magistrate Evelio Tabio said today only top leaders would be held, and that all but 176 were already set free.

Rodriguez said he was concerned that "high Cuban authorities who helped us because they sympathized with our cause be made to suffer. I wish that all responsibility should be left to fall upon my shoulders."

Rodriguez blamed Orlando Masferrer, a Cuban with the rank of lieutenant colonel in the expedition, for letting the Aurora fall into the hands of the Cuban navy.

"I was leading the way on the Aurora with 400 men and enough arms and ammunition to equip another 1000 men, but then we received a call from the Maximo Gomez in which Masferrer informed us he was in a tough spot," he said.

Suddenly Surrounded

"I thought his ship went aground and ordered the Aurora to go to his help. Suddenly we found ourselves surrounded by Cuban warships."

Rodriquez said that if Masferrer considered himself lost "the thing for him to do was to let me go ahead."

Special Magistrate Evelio Tabio permitted newsmen to interview Masferrer.

Masferrer said Dr. Juan Jose Arevalo, President of Guatemala, had delivered most of the expeditions' arms to be used not only against the Trujillo regime but also against "the regimes now existing in Honduras and Nicaragua."

He said the President got the arms "in Argentina in a transaction from government to government."

Three American youths who joined the expeditionary forces said today they signed up three months ago because "we had friends in it and because we knew the country was under an oppresive dictatorship."

They were Hollis Smith, 26, Palisades Park, N. J.; Rupert E. Waddel, 27, and Thomas Sawyer, 26, both of New York City.

Waddell and Sawyer were with the United States armed forces in the war.

NLRB Ignores Denham Rule In Old Case

The National Labor Relations Board apparently has decided to ignore the non-Communist affidavit ruling of its general counsel, Robert N. Denham, in completing the processing of some cases still pending under the old Wagner Act.

Denham has ruled that AFL and CIO unions cannot use NLRB services under the Taft-Hartley law until the top officials of the two big organizations file non-Communist affidavits. A spokesman said the ruling blocks unions from using the board for their own gain but does not prevent use of board machinery against unions for boycotts, illegal strikes, and decertification elections.

The NLRB has not formally overruled Denham, but a tip as to its future course was seen last night in its decision to go ahead with a public hearing this week on unfair labor charges brought by the Textile Workers (CIO) against Linwood Cotton Mills, Lafayette, Ga.

The union, as well as CIO President Philip Murray, has so far failed to comply with the Denham ruling. This is the first case involving a non-complying union in which the board has taken any action since the Taft-Hartley law became effective.

A board spokesman said Tuesday's hearing has no broader significance than that NLRB has decided to go ahead with this step in one particular case. But the willingness to take this step in a lone case could become a precedent.

Work Asked for Handicapped

Six Cabinet officers and Veterans Administrator Omar N. Bradley asked the Nation last night to maintain a steady supply of jobs for the full employment of seven million disabled workers, one million of them veterans of World War II.

They said the immediate task is to find jobs for 130,000 unemployed disabled veterans and 370,000 unemployed nonveteran handicapped persons. In addition they called on the Nation to help rehabilitate one million handicapped persons for gainful occupations, stimulate employe racceptance of these job applicants, and establish public support to sustain a program for their employment.

The occasion was the start of the third annual National Employ-the-Physically-Handicapped-Week established by Congress, and proclaimed by President Truman.

Cabinet officers urging employment of physically handicapped persons were Secretary of State George C. Marshall, Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder, Secretary of Defense James Forrestal, Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson, Secretary of Commerce W. Averill Harriman and Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach.

In Washngton, observance of the week will begin Monday at a luncheon in the Mayflower Hotel, when Vice Admiral Ross T. McIntire, USN (retired), chairman of the Committee on NEPHW, will speak.

The slogan for the third annual NEPHW week will be the same as in 1946, "Hire the Handicapped—It's Good Business."

Howard Hughes Investigation Is Resumed in Deep Secrecv

By The Associated Press

Senate investigators secretly resumed yesterday an inquiry into 40 million dollars worth of wartime airplane contracts awarded to Howard Hughes, Hollywood millionaire.

Two closed-door sessions were held yesterday, it was learned, to question witnesses who may testify publicly at a hearing scheduled to reopen November 17.

Chairman Ferguson (R., Mich.) and attorney and investigators for a War Investigating Subcommittee, made special efforts to avoid attention. They borrowed a room from the Senate Judiciary Committee and instructed employes there to keep quiet. And there was no leak on names of persons they quizzed.

Senator Cain (R., Wash.) and McGrath (D., R. I.) sat in on the sessions along with William Rogers, chief committee counsel, and Francis Flanagan, counsel specializing on the Hughes inquiry.

These quiet meetings were in strong contrast to the dramatic hearings Ferguson abruptly recessed last August 11 after partial questioning of Hughes and his heavy-spending public relations man, John W. Meyer.

It was during these hearings that:

Hughes testified that Chairman Brewster (R., Me.) of the full War Investigating Committee offered to call off the inquiry if Hughes would merge Trans-World Airlines, which he controls, with Pan American Airways and would support a single overseas American airline.

Brewster denied it under oath.

$15,000 Pay Asked For U. S. Scientists

Program to Improve Experts' Lot Advocated by President's Board

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

The President's Scientific Research Board yesterday recommended a 19-point program to improve working conditions of 30,000 Federal scientists.

A highlight of the program, designed also to attract top scientists into Federal service, is a recommendation for a $15,000-aytar maximum solary for scientific personnel.

The board said it found the Federal Government offers a wider range of research activity, as modern laboratories and equipment, and a competitive salary scale compared to industry and universities. In spite of this, the board said, scientists hold Uncle Sam "in low esteem" as an employer, and prefer to work for universities and private industry.

The survey has revealed, the board said, that the reasons for "this anamolous situation" are largely historical, and that many corrective measures already are under way to improve conditions.

Board Recommendations

The board's recommendations to improve the situation include:

1. Raise the top pay for Federal scientists, now at a $10,000 ceiling, to $15,000 a year.

The last Congress authorized the Army and Navy to pay up to $15,000 to 45 scientists. The board feels that "sound personnel policy on a Government-wide basis" requires that all United States scientists should be eligible to get the higher pay, not only a select few working on military projects.

The average compensation of the Government scientist, according to the board, is higher than in universities, but lower than in industry. The medium pay for Government scientists is less than $4500.

2. Every effort should be made to provide for recognizing merit, by giving personal credit to individual scientists for achievement, by publicity, by promotions, and by distributing research results widely.

The scientists, according to the board's poll, regard status and prestige associated with their professional attainments as more important than salary. Therefore, says the board, it is important to boost the prestige of Government scientists.

Atom Bomb Credit

Some scientist sfeel that there has been inadequate recognition of the scientists who made the great intellectual contributions to the development of the atom bomb. Lion's share of the credit went to the military establishments rather than to the scientists actually responsible for the work, the board reported.

3. Specific improvements (listed by the board) should be brought about to increase the Federal scientists' opportunities for growth and advancement.

The poll conducted by the board among American scientists disclosed that only 37 per cent of those working in the Federal service felt their greatest career satisfaction could be obtained under the employ of Uncle Sam. Only 5 per cent of the industrial scientists and 1 per cent of the university scientists agreed.

There is a widespread belief that many fine scientific minds are "trapped in a blind alley" under present conditions of employment and advancement, the board found. There is also a feeling among the scietntists that under Civil Service employment, a premium is placed on mediocrity.

More Freedom Asked

4. Government research agencies must find ways of giving scientists more freedom and independence.

The board found that the Federal scientist finds his desire to pursue specific projects restricted in various ways—by insistence of a special clientele seeking specific services, by existence of approved programs, by pressure of groups seeking funds to support their own objectives.

This situation isn't much different that in industrial or university laboratories, the board said, except that the Government is so much bigger. Thus, the scientist in the Government is much further removed from the source of direction and thereby his feeling of frustration is so much the greater.

Tired, "All-In"— Listless Feeling Brought To Halt

As Vibrant Energy is Released To Every Muscle, Fibre, Cell

Do you get up in the mornings still tired, feel down-and-out all day? Have you checked-up on your blood strength lately? Overwork, undue worry, cold, flu or other illness often wears down the red-blood-cells.

Every day—every hour—millions of tiny red-blood-cells must pour forth from the marrow of your bones to replace those that are worn-out. A low blood count may affect you in several ways: no appetite, underweight, no energy, a run-down condition, lack of resistance to infection and disease.

To get real relief you must keep up your blood strength. Medical authorities, by analysis of the blood, have by positive proof shown that SSS Tonic is amazingly effective in building up low blood strength in non-organic nutritional anemia. This is due to the SSS Tonic formula which contains special and potent activating ingredients.

Also, SSS Tonic helps you enjoy the food you eat by increasing the gastric digestive juice when it is non-organically too little or scanty—thus the stomach will have little cause to get balky with gas, bloat and give off that sour food taste.

Don't wait! Energize your body with rich, red-blood. Start on SSS Tonic now. As vigorous blood surges throughout your whole body, greater freshness and strength should make you eat better, sleep better, feel better, work better, play better, have a healthy color glow in your skin—firm flesh fill out hollow places. Millions of bottles sold. Get a bottle from your drug store. SSS Tonic helps Build Sturdy Health.

Egypt Is Cut Off In Efforts to Stop Spread of Cholera

Cairo, Egypt, Oct. 4 (AP).—Egyptian authorities halted rail communications between Cairo and 15 provincial towns today in an effort to check the spread of a cholera epidemic which has taken 268 lives in two weeks. Schools and universities in Cairo were closed.

A railway engineer was suspended for having slowed his Cairo-bound train when passing through Benha, a town in an infected zone, enabling several persons to jump aboard.

The United States Embassy forwarded to Washington an Egyptian request for one million units of anticholera vaccine, in addition to the 1,600,000 units promised by the United States Navy.

In Moscow the Soviet news agency Tass announced that the Russian government was sending one million vaccine applications to Egypt.

U. S. Science Coordination Plan Proposed

ings; wider publication of scientific results, and other measures to give the individual scientist more credit and prestige for his accomplishments.

Chapter on Security

One chapter of the report deals with the knotty conflict between scientific freedom and national security. The conclusion is that the trend should be toward more freedom. The report sees in the device of a loyalty check a measure which will render secrecy classification and "compartmentalization" of work increasingly less necessary.

The report inveighs against the habit of "over-classification" of scientific material. It asks for "much greater caution" in the future in classifying material as secret. It suggests that the scientists themselves should have the dominant voice in determining what the classifications should be.

"Strict military security in the narrow sense is not entirely consistent with the broader requirements of national security," the report declares.

It argues that national security is best served by maintaining "a climate conducive to the full flowering of free inquiry." Fundamental discoveries must circulate freely, it states.

Therefore, it declares, "Security regulations . . . should be applied only when strictly necessary and then limited to specific instruments, machines or processes. They should not attempt to cover basic principles or fundamental knowledge."

Suggested Improvements

In general terms, the report finds room for important improvements in Federal scientific activities in the fields of:

1. Determination of broad policies.

2. Allocation of functions and the relative emphasis on each type of research.

3. Establishment of closer cooperation among the various Federal scientific agencies, and between them and outside scientific organizations.

On the question of using Federal funds in outside scientic organizations, the study recommends that contracts be given to industrial laboratories to finance developmental studies and applications. For basic research, it recommends grants in aid, rather than contracts.

Cancer Rate Here Highest in 12 Cities

4115 Total a Surprise Since Younger Population Should Be Less Susceptible

Preliminary cancer survey results reveal 6019 cases of cancer in the Greater Washington area, 4115 of them in the District, Health Officer George C. Ruhland announced yesterday.

This amounts to 488.1 cases per 100,000 population here, a case rate higher than any reportable disease including syphilis, he said.

United States Public Health Service officials said the Washington case rate was higher than that found in any of 11 other United States cities surveyed.

The survey was begun last January by the District Health Department and U. S. Public Health Service. Reports of cancer cases observed or treated during 1946 were received from 25 area hospitals and 1768 doctors, Dr. Ruhland said.

"Patients in Government hospitals whose residence is in areas other than the metropolitan area of Washington were not included in the total of 6019 cases reported," he revealed.

In addition to the District cases, 967 were reported in surrounding counties of Maryland and 853 in nearby Virginia areas, he said.

Dr. Ruhland noted that the cancer case rate was higher than that of other diseases reported here during 1946.

"HThe case rate for pneumonia (all forms) was 177.7 per 100,000 population," he said. "The tuberculosis case rate was 310.3 for the same population ratio. The disease with the nearest case rate to cancer in 1946 was syphilis (all forms), which had a case rate of 444.1 per 100,000 population."

Dr. Harold F. Dorn, chairman of the section on statistics for the USPHS National Cancer Institute, who helped direct the Washington survey, said the case rate here was higher than shown by similar surveys made in Birmingham, Atlanta, Philadelphia, Detroit, San Francisco, Chicago, Pittsburgh, New Orleans, Denver, Fort Worth and Dallas.

13 Per Cent Higher Than Average

He said the Greater Washington case rate of 488.1 per 100,000 population was more than 13 per cent higher than the 430 average rate in the 11 other cities.

Highest rates among the other cities—450 for the same population ratio—were found in Birmingham, New Orleans, Atlanta, Dallas and Fort Worth, where there were more cases of skin cancer.

Dr. Dorn said he was surprised to find such a high rate in the Greater Washington area. "The probability of cancer increases with age," he explained. "Washington has a younger average age than a city like San Francisco for example, so we expected to find a lower rate here."

Atom Power Far Off, Says Lilienthal

Detroit, Oct. 6 (AP).—David E. Lilienthal said today the development of an atomic power industry is yet a long way off and the fact of its future possibility should not delay present "sound expansion" of the electrical industry.

In an address before the Economic Club of Detroit, the chairman of the United States Atomic Energy Commission said it has found there is a "jungle of difficult scientific and engineering problems" to be cut through before the first commercially practical atomic power plant can be attained.

It is probable that within 12 to 24 months electric power on a demonstration basis will be produced from atomic energy, he said, but emphasized:

"What is certainly and definitely not near at hand are large-scale, practical, commercial applications of power from atomic energy."

Lilienthal said he believed it of international importance to make "a frank statement" because stories are being spread abroad that the United States could keep Europe from a cold winter and solve its heat and energy problems by releasing its atomic secrets.

"Now his story is completely without foundation in fact," he went on.

The technical problems are so many and so great, Lilienthal said, that a commercially practical atomic power plant "is not just around the corner, not around two corners."

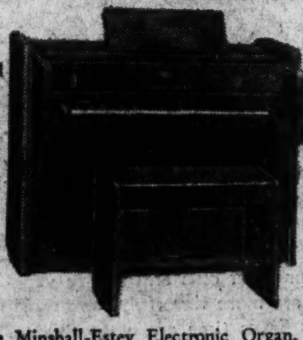
this Piano-Size ORGAN



The Minshall-Estey Electronic Organ, small and compact as the average piano, produces tones as full and rich as those of a great cathedral organ. Lauded by the most demanding musicians for its full scope and versatility in the home, auditorium, church or funeral chapel. So easy to play that any pianist can master its technique. The single keyboard has a total compass of six octaves. Tablets and tremolo control are placed in the center front, close to keys, within easy reach. Here at last is the organ thousands of music lovers have wanted—so compact—so easy to play—and true of tone.

4 Minesweepers Being Sought In Sea Mystery

Pearl Harbor, Oct. 4 (AP).—The maritime mystery of four minesweepers which vanished off Palmyra Island 11 days ago remained unsolved today as the Navy added two planes to a widening search.

A B-17 searched the area all day yesterday without result and two more of the Flying Fortresses were sent by the Hawaiian Sea Frontier to Palmyra, approximately 1100 miles south of here.

Three men, either Mexicans or Filipinos, were aboard the four minesweepers being towed from Acapulco, Mexico, to the Philippines by the tug Edward M. McQuinn under charter to the Luzon Stevedoring Co.

The Sea Frontier said it learned that the tug left the minesweepers and put in to Palmyra to refuel 11 days ago. When it returned, they were gone.

Woman Sues Store, Charging Injuries

Furniture purchased from Lansburgh & Brothers, Inc., department store, was thrown at her by deliverymen, a woman charged yesterday in a $25,000 District Court suit.

Mrs. Doris Fitzgerald said she suffered face and nose injuries on May 6, when deliverymen brought two chairs to her home at 628 5th st. se., and threw them through an open window.

A spokesman for Lansburgh's yesterday declined to comment until official notification of the suit is received.

AVC to Hear Kirkland

Problems facing the District government will be discussed tomorrow by James C. Kirkland, counsel for the Senate District Committee, at the luncheon meeting of the American Veterans Committee Luncheon Club at 12:15 at the YWCA at 17th and K sts. nw.

Life in Prison Ordered for Three

Baltimore, Oct. 4 (AP).—Life imprisonment was ordered today for three seamen convicted of first degree murder as the aftermath of the fire-bombing last October 31 of a waterfront rooming house where six men lost their lives.

The defendants are Marty Vicks, 25, of Philadelphia; Kennon W. Langham, 22, of Brewton, Ala., and Walter Haas, 34, of Baltimore.

Haas was accused of hiring Vicks and Langham to toss a homemade incendiary into therooming house. Haas, identifying himself as picket leader for the then striking Seafarers International Union (AFL), denied complicity in the bombing, but admitted throwing a warning into the same rooming house the week before.

Scientific Assembly To Attract 2000

Record Turnout Is Anticipated Here For 3-Day Session Starting Tomorrow

More than 2000 medical people from Washington and neighboring States will participate in the eighteenth annual Scientific Assembly opening tomorrow for three days in the Hotel Statler.

Attendance at the assembly, sponsored by the District of Columbia Medical Society, is expected to exceed that of any previous gathering, Dr. Robert H. Groh, general chairman, said yesterday.

Physicians, dentists, pharmacists, nurses, hospital residents, technicians and members of other allied professional groups have been invited.

Of particular interest to the general public will be a public health exhibit, an innovation this year. Among features of the exhibit will be "Food Fads and Fallacies" and "Mechanical Quackery."

Wide Range of Topics

Scientific sessions will be held at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. daily. Topics will range from the opening paper by Dr. Herbert Schmidt of the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn., on "Recognition and Management of Esophageal Disease," to a panel discussion on antibiotics by Dr. Paul A. Bunn of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Veterans Administration, Dr. Harry F. Dowling, George Washington University School of Medicine, and Dr. John Barnwell, also of the Veterans Administration.

Dr. Raymond T. Holden, jr., president of the District Medical Society, will preside at the opening scientific session tomorrow.

E. M. Jellinek, Sc. D., director, Section on Alcohol Studies, Yale University, will discuss "Newer Approaches in the Care of the Alcoholic" at the Wednesday afternoon session. Following his address, William M. Escavaille, jr., of Washington, will describe his experience with Alcoholics Anonymous.

A public meeting will be held in the hotel's Presidential ballroom Tuesday night. "Our Youth Today" will be the subject of discussion.

Speakers will include Dr. Miriam Van Waters, superintendent, Women's Reformatory, Framingham, Mass., Theron L. Caudle, Assistant United States Attorney General, and Dr. George E. Gardner, director of the Judge Baker Guidance Center, Boston. G. Howard Shaw, former Assistant Secretary of State, will be moderator.

Televised Operations

Surgical operations at Georgetown Hospital on Monday and Doctors Hospital on Tuesday will be televised to the hotel from 11 to noon.

Dr. Louis M. A. Krause, associate professor of medicine, University of Mrayland, will speak tomorrow at the first of the daily luncheons for District Medical Society members.

The Assembly will close with a dinner Wednesday night at which past presidents of the Medical Society will be guests of honor. Chief speaker will be Dr. Edward L. Bortz, president of the American Medical Association, who will discuss "Medical Statesmanship."

Paralleling the Scientific Assembly will be the thirtieth annual, three-day meeting of the Orthopedic Appliance and Limb Manufacturers' Association, opening tomorrow.

General Omar N. Bradley, Veterans Administrator, will open the convention by welcoming the 300 delegates, representing more than 200 companies, at 10:45 a. m. at the VA building, H st. and Vermont ave. nw.

All other sessions will be held at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Austrians Booming Horse Chestnuts

Vienna, Oct. 4.—Horse chestnuts are being boomed here as something new and vital for the economic rehabilitation of Austria.

The Austrian press and radio appealed today to all chestnut harvesters to surrender their collection to the government and promised them workers' supplementary ration cards and a cent a pound for the nuts.

Among the basic ingredients that will be extracted are saponin, a soap substitute; tannin, which yields tannic acid for leather processing, and starch, for laundry use.

French Birthrate Exceeds Deaths

Paris, Oct. 4.—Birthrate figures for the first six months of 1947 indicate France will have a record-breaking number of babies for the second consecutive year for a total well ahead of the death rate.

Before the war deaths ran consistently ahead of births.

There were 445,000 babies born from January through June. This compared with 428,000 born in the same period last year, or an increase of 17,000. The first semester of 1947 also showed that the death rate was falling. Against the 445,000 recorded births, there were 300,000 deaths. Against the 428,000 births during the first six months of 1946, there were 306,000 deaths.

The 12 months of 1946 produced 835,000 infants, the greatest number ever recorded and the first time in 11 years that births had exceeded deaths.

PTA Hears Need Of School Building

Requirements of Construction Program Listed at Fairfax Federation 'Workshop'

Four major needs of a long-term school constructoin program for Fairfax County were outlined yesterday by Paul Cooper, assistant superintendent for Maryland's Prince Georges County.

Cooper, who heads his country's school building program, outlined the needs before an annual "workshop meeting of the Fairfax County Federation of PTA's in the Fairfax Elementary School.

Those planning school construction must first determine what the county's chool needs will be, Cooper said; how many children attend public schools and how many are expected 10 years from now.

Secondly, he pointed out, plan- program ners must determine how changes in school program will alter building plans in the year sto come, and third, what additional school facilities will be beneficial not only to pupils but also to the community. Cooper listed library, health and auditorium facilities as examples of school plant useful to the community.

And fourth, Cooper said, planners must decide how any program of construction can be financed, and whether the needs "are going to exceed your ability to pay at the moment."

He said the greatest mistake made by school authorities in school construction programs has been to leave preliminary planning of needed facilities "to the architect" instead of presenting him with well-studied plans and permitting him to develop his blueprints about them.

Another speaker, Fairfax School Superintendent W. T. Woodson, said the county's school construction program had swelled from a high of $348,000 in 1939 to $2,123,000 for 1948, with $2,520,000 more allocated for facilities not yet planned.

Other principal speakers on the Fairfax School situation were George T. Reeves, Falls Church representative to the Fairfax School Board, and John T. Levendes of Vienna, Va., who represented the parent's point of view.

Officer Made Bladensburg Police Chief

Henry J. Nebel, Bladensburg policeman, has been made full-time police chief, under reorganization orders issued by the town's council.

The new chief, the first since the town's new incorporation, was appointed Friday night at the second meeting since the council's creation. Albert Firestein was reappointed a part-time policeman, and a third officer will be named soon. Bids for collection of ashes, trash and garbage in Sunnybrook, will be received at the next meeting of the council. Councilmen O. L. Stevens and C. F. Palmer are collecting bids.

The council voted to establish July 1 to June 30 as the town's fiscal year. Residents of Sunnybrook will be taxed 20 cents per $100 valuation for the rest of the fiscal year, the council decided.

Establishment of minimum standards for roads and streets in line with Federal Housing Administration regulations, and definition of the duties of the chief of police will be acted upon at the next meeting. Councilmen Stevens and Vincent J. McCarron were named roads committee.

The council acted favorably on a motion to indorse granting rezoning from residential A to commercial D of a tract at Defense hwy. near Edmonston rd. The recommendation will be sent to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Prince Georges County Commissioners.

Va. Teachers Seek Action On Sales Tax

Growing sentiment for imposition of a sales tax in Virginia was evidenced last week at a meeting of more than a thousand northern Virnigia school teachers.

The teachers, members of district H of the Virginia Education Association, voted to call for action by the 1949 General Assembly of Virginia for assessing the sales tax and using the money collected to finance the State's expanding education program.

Action of the group was similar to that already taken by other districts of the VEA. The parent VEA body representing 13 districts is to meet in Richmond on October 17, when it is expected that action of the VEA districts will be backed up and plans laid for pursuing the sales tax program when the Assembly meets in January.

The sales tax has been proposed repeatedly both in and out of assembly sessions. In 1944 a bill was introduced calling for a 3 per cent sales tax, which its sponsor estimated would net more than 15 million dollars for school purposes. The bill wa sopposed by Governor Colgate W. Darden, jr., who suggested that the sales tax question should be submitted to referendum.

Early last summer the Arlington County Board unanimously adopted a resolution opposing a sales tax in Virginia, declaring such a tax would be "most burdensome on those least able to pay."

W. Bedell Smith Flies On Way to Washington

Moscow, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—American Ambassador W. Bedell Smith left by plane today for a series of diplomatic consultations in Washington. He expects to return here late this month.

Gen. Lucius D. Clay, American military governor for Germany, will join Smith on the homeward flight at Berlin.

Candidates Tour Schools in Arlington

The contrast between school facilities in different Arlington areas was stressed yesterday by five school board candidates as they made their third Saturday inspection tour of county educational facilities.

The five, picked as candidates by 51 civic organizations in the recent School Board Nominating Conveniton, began their study September 20. Yesterday, they inspected facilities at the Farlington, Shirley Homes, Nellie Custis, Pickett Homes, and Hoffman-Boston schools.

Biggest contrast, they found, was between the Nellie Custis School in Arlington's Virginia Highlands section—a long-settled county area—and the Shirley and Pickett Homes schools, both set up to accommodate new families.

Candidate O. Glenn Stahl noted that the Custis school had exactly the same number of pupils as the Shirley, yet boasted more rooms, plus clinic facilities, basement play space, and an auditorium not found in the newer school.

The Hoffman-Boston School (Negro), which handles students from the first to the twelfth grades, does not have an accredited secondary school, the five pointed out, and its physical plant also is poor.

Making the trip, in addition to Stahl, were candidates Bernard Joy, Colin MacPherson, Curtis Tuthill and Mrs. Edmund Campbell.

Opposing them in the November 4 election are five candidates endorsed by the Greater Arlington Association: William M. Smith and E. C. Betts, jr., both incumbents; E. T. Gearhart, jr., R. M. Kimble and Dr. Charles P. Cake. Mrs. Lucy G. Bussey, incumbent, is running as an independent.

Bandit Gets Gems Valued At $600,000

New York, Oct. 4 (AP).—A bandit who threatened to shoot Mrs. Sari Gabor Hilton and her infant daughter today robbed the beautiful red-haired former "Miss Hungary," divorced wife of hotel magnate Conrad Hilton, of nearly three quarters of a million dollars worth of jewels.

The holdup man, who forced his way into Mrs. Hilton's penthouse apartment at 8 East 83d st., just off Fifth ave., made off with 25 pieces of jewelry in what police said was one of the greatest jewel thefts in New York history.

Mrs. Hilton, who wore a dazzling display of diamond-studded jewels on a round of exclusive night spots last night, lost a diamond necklace, two diamond bracelets, a diamond engagement ring and a diamond wedding ring among the stolen jewels.

Value May be $700,000

The bandit tied Mrs. Hilton, sister of Hungarian Actress Eva Gabor, to a love seat and also trussed up her maid, Mrs. Lulu Barth, before fleeing.

Chief of Detectives George P. Mitchell, who said the jewels were valued at between $600,000 and $700,000, said Mrs. Hilton was in her bedroom with her 6-month-old daughter, Constance, when the robber forced his way into the apartment.

Police gave this story of the robbery:

As the maid answered the doorbell, a tall, gray-suited man told her, "I'm here to fix the wiring."

When Mrs. Barth told the man, "There's no wiring to be fixed," he drew a gun, pushed his way into the apartment, and pointing the gun at the maid, said, "Give me the jewelry."

Frightened, Mrs. Barth screamed, and was knocked down by the intruder who threatened her again with the gun and said, "Now stay there."

He crossed the apartment to the bedroom, grabbed Mrs. Hilton by the arm, pulled her into the foyer, and said:

"If you don't keep quiet, I'll shoot you and the baby."

Mrs. Hilton later told police, "I was so afraid for the baby I sat down."

After tying Mrs. Hilton and the maid to a love seat in the foyer, the bandit went back to the bedroom where he ransacked a jewel box on a dresser and then took other pieces from closets and a box in the bedroom floor under an upholstered chair.

He stuffed the jewels in his pocket and left the building in the self-service elevator. After he left, the two women wiggled free of their bonds.

Police who made a minute examination of the apartment said the bandit, who wore kid gloves, left one behind in his haste to escape with his haul.

One police official declared, "It's the biggest jewelry robbery by one man I ever heard of."

Gambler Held After Partner Dies of Wound

Reno, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—A murder complaint was filed today against Louis (Russian Louie) Strauss, professional and big-time gambler and one-time intimate of the slain Benjamin (Bugsy) Siegel, after his gambling partner, apparently recovering from a gunshot would allegedly inflicted by Strauss, died in a hospital under mysterous circumstances.

Strauss' partner, Harry Sherwood, died last night and an autopsy was performed today after Dr. Vinton Mulled refused to sign a death certificate for his patient.

Dr. Muller said Sherwood, co-owner with Strauss of the luxurious Tahoe Village gambling casino on the shores of Lake Tahoe in the high Sierras, was rallying and "in excellent mental spirits" 15 minutes before he died.

He demanded an autopsy include the contents of Sherwood's stomach, because of the possibility that his patient was poisoned, although it was "possible" a blood clot might have escaped from the area where the bullet had lodged in the spine and paralyzed Sherwood from the waist down.

D. C. Restaurants Would Save Food By Menu Planning

A program to save food in Washington restaurants without resorting to meatless days will be presented to the District Commissioners Tuesday morning.

Robert J. Wilson, executive secretary of the Washington Restaurant Association, said the plan, suitable for homes, too, will consist of careful menu planning to avoid waste. Restaurateurs are expected to cooperate if it wins official approval, Wilson said.

One of the slogans Wilson expects to use, he says, is that the plan will help feed the world's starving peoples while it combats high food costs through economic use of foodstuffs.

Those who will accompany Wilson in presenting the program are Watson B. Rulon, Hubert H. Keller, John S. Daniels and Lofton S. Wesley.

Virginia's Chief Justice Holt Dies

Staunton, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—Chief Justice Henry W. Holt, 83, of the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals died here tonight.

The justice, who was named to the State Supreme Court by Governor Byrd in 1928, had been in declining health for some time, but it was not generally known that death was near. The end came at his home.

The dean of Virginia jurists had served on the bench for 50 years, beginning with a three-year tenure—1893-1896—at the Corporation Court at Buena Vista.

Justice Holt, whose brother, the late Saxon Holt of Newport News, was a member of the Virginia Senate for 36 years and served as lieutenant governor, was born in Isle of Wight County, the son of Micajah Quincy and Virginia Henry Holt.

He attended Virginia Military Institute in 1886, later transferring to neighborhing Washington and Lee, where he received his bachelor of laws degree in 1888. He was honored with a doctorate by Washington and Lee in 1929.

The young Phi Beta Kappa lawyer took up practice in Wichita, Kans., in 1888 but returned to his native State three years later and put out his shingle at Staunton. He served the Buena Vista Corporation Court for three years, resigning in 1896.

Four years, then, were spent in private practice and he was named judge of the Corporation Court in Staunton. In 1912 he was appointed judge of the eighttenth judicial circuit of Virginia, a post he served for 16 years before going to the Supreme Court.

He was named by then Governor Byrd to succeed Justice Martin P. Burks as an associate justice, and in 1946, upon the retirement of Chief Justice Preston White Campbell, he succeeded to the senior position on the appeals bench.

Surviving are five children, Col. H. Winston Holt, jr., USA, of Richmond; Miss Virginia Holt, dean of Chatham Hall, Chatham, Va.; Miss Esta Holt of Staunton and Mrs. Rodney Washbur, Worcester, Mass.; a brother, Richmond Holt of Washington, and a halfbrother, Robert Holt of Newport News.

'Religion in Russia' Alexandria Topic

Dr. Sergius Yakobson, consultant in Slavic history and analyst of Russian affairs at Library of Congress, will speak on "Religion in Russia" tomorrow at the Norton Memorial of St. Paul's Church, Alexandria, at 8:30 p. m.

A native of Russia and former professor at the University of London, Dr. Yakobson will discuss the status of the church prior to communism, the effect of communism on religion, and the meaning of the church in Russia today. After his lecture, he will conduct a question and answer forum. The program is open to the public.

This Is Something They Care About . . .

The Washington Post

"OPEN DOOR POLICY"—Mrs. Arthur Ringwalt, at the door of her home, 3211 Idaho ave. nw., accepts gifts for "Care" from Elizabeth McClure, 4, of 3220 Idaho ave., and Mimi Munroe, 8, of 3200 Idaho ave. The youngsters' parents sent the cash for the neighborhood project, which, in effect, is a food conservation program.

A neighborly chat among seven housewives resulted in a unique food conservation plan for the 3200 block of Idaho ave. nw.

Mrs. Arthur Ringwalt, of 3211 Idaho ave. nw., said each family in the block has pledged to forego eating meat one day a week. The money housewives save from their meat purchases will be put into a group fund to buy about 3 CARE packages a month.

"We hope," Mrs. Ringwalt said, "that people in other blocks will adopt our simple plan to conserve food. We've had no meetings, elections of officers, or elaborate bookkeeping methods. Our idea is to make the plan practical and effective."

Began on Sept. 22

Admittedly the author of the pledge her neighbors signed on September 14, Mrs. Ringwalt said she started the plan by collecting $2 from each house on September 29. The money was used to buy a 22-pound standard food package from CARE, to be sent to an Austrian war widow living in Vienna with her three children. Her next-door neighbor, Mrs. Hazen L. Hoyt, of 3215 Idaho ave. nw., will collect about $30 to buy more of the standard type CARE packages at the end of October.

"I did the collecting for September, myself, Mrs. Ringwalt said, 'but I made it clear that this kind of idea works better for everyone if the people voluntarily take their money to the collector's house.'"

"Next month, she speculated," I don't think Mrs. Hoyt will have to go out of her house to get the block's contributions."

Feeds Four for Month

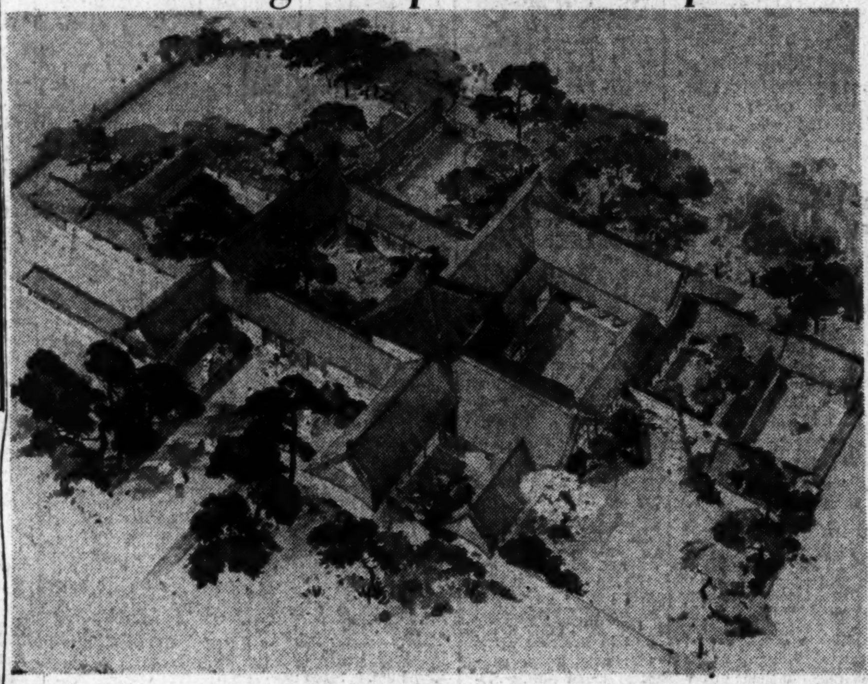
In the next six months money will be collected on a rotating basis by the following people:

Ralph Daniel, 3229 Idaho ave. nw.; Mrs. George Fleming, 3201 Idaho ave. nw.; Mrs. R. Bruce Warden, 3220 Idaho ave. nw.; Mrs. Henry Munroe, 3200 Idaho ave. nw., and Mrs. J. Russell Berryman, 3238 Idaho ave. nw.

The 22-pound standard package that Mrs. Ringwalt and her neighbors bought for $10 from the Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe, Inc. (CARE), is designed to last a family of four persons a month.

CARE, a nonprofit cooperative, has a Washington office in Room 319, of 1344 Connecticut ave. nw.

Chinese 'Village' Proposed for Campus . . .



PROJECT AT MARYLAND UNIVERSITY—Architect's drawing shows how Chinese Village, estimated to cost one million dollars, will look if erected, as proposed, on a plot at the University of Maryland

The University of Maryland's campus may become the major center of a world peace movement and a focal point of the World Peace Foundation, Inc.

The foundation, dedicated to the cause of peace through a program of mass education on the customs and ways of life of the leading nations of the world has issued invitations to 12 nations to participate.

These leading nations, according to Col. Alfred C. Oliver, U. S. A., ret. foundation board chairman, recommended the basic idea and submitted complete details of their respective country's plans.

China Sends Expert

China has already sent one noted architect to the foundation to erect a Chinese village, estimated to cost one million dollars and located on a two and one-half acre plot.

Britain is to have a house exhibit, for which negotiations are now in progress.

H. C. Byrd, president of Maryland University, has assured the foundation that sufficient land, just west of the girls' dormitories on the campus, will be available under a 50-year agreement. The foundation will finance construction of the buildings. Exact replicas of life in other countries as exhibited on the Maryland campus, will be open to the public free of charge throughout the year.

als and admirals. So when he returns next spring, as he apparently plans at present, the support for him as yet unannounced candidacy might easily develop momentum.

3. MacArthur's age may react against his popularity as a White House candidate. He will be 68 next January. A campaign of popular education might eradicate some of the negative feeling that exists on that score.

4. It is still very early to test the ultimate strength of President Truman's possible opponents. This is especially true in respect to a man like MacArthur about whose views on domestic and international issues very little actually is known to the public.

In contrast to the situation regarding General Eisenhower where the public is not sure whether he is a Republican or Democrat, the vote for MacArthur divides strictly along party lines.

	MacArthur	Truman	No Opin.
Dems.	17%	73%	10%
Reps.	65	24	11

Among occupational groups the general's greatest strength lies among professional and business people and his weakest spot is with union labor members. Although no age group gives him a majority, he is more popular among the older voters.

General MacArthur does not emerge in as favorable a position as another general, Dwight D. Eisenhower, in "trial heat" races against President Truman. Nor does he run as well at this time as Governor Thomas E. Dewey did in a "trial heat" reported last month.

"Trial heats" reported previously show the following comparative results:

Eisenhower	48%
Truman	39
No Opinion	13
Dewey	44
Truman	46
No Opinion	10

regulations and returning powers to State and local governments, a "comprehensive" labor policy, and armed forces unification.

"I have dwelt on the general philosophy of the Republican Party—that progress must be resumed within American principles of liberty and local self-government," he said.

"The principal conclusion I have formed is that the Republicans will carry these six States in 1948, for Congress and for President. These States went Republican in 1946 and the prevailing opinion is that the Republicans will be even stronger in 1948.

Praises Hospitality

"With regard to the Republican nomination I will compare the conclusions I have formed with other information from the East, and make my reply to the Ohio Central Committee about October 24."

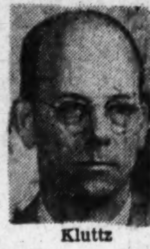
THE STORE OF NATIONALLY FAMOUS MERCHANDISE

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Defense Secretary Forrestal, a serious student of Government administration, has an unequaled opportunity to try out his ideas in the Army-Navy unification program.



Kluttz

Basically, his thoughts are: to appoint a small competent staff, to delegate and to decentralize authority to responsible officials, and to build up a permanent career staff of able civilians.

His Office of National Defense will have between 150 and 200 employes. These people will coordinate the work of the military services and act as a sort of board of directors with operating people in fixing policies. There will be no mergers and no sweeping reorganizations.

Forrestal's three assistants are: W. J. McNeil, Jack Ohly, and Marx Leva. None will insulate Forrestal and the military and civilian operating chiefs. The Defense Secretary doesn't believe in more and more layers of responsibility.

McNeil will handle budget, personnel and management engineering among other duties. He will appoint outstanding men in these fields to work with him. Each will have a small and compact staff, from three to five persons. Their job will be to coordinate and to work out uniform policies for the services. They will neither operate nor dictate.

Policy matters in these fields will be fixed by a so-called board of directors. For example, say a major personnel question is involved. McNeil will call in his personnel man and the top-ranking personnel chiefs of Army, Navy and Air Force—people who can speak with authority from these agencies. Once a policy is set, the respective personnel chiefs are to have the authority to carry it out.

This approach means that the budget, personnel and management engineering people in the Army, Navy and Air Force will be placed directly under and will report to the respective secretaries. This will be something new for the Army and Air Forces.

One of the many problems facing McNeil's office is whether the Air Force is to have its own administrative services. AF formerly used the Army's. However, a study shows that it would be just as economical for the Air Force to have its own—and it's a cinch to be ordered. This step will centralize authority and keep the top staff down to a minimum.

Forrestal tore a page out of the British book in setting up a job for Ohly. He believes the British are the best coordinators and he hopes to make Ohly the best coordinator in our Government. Ohly will head up an office of the secretariat. Specifically, he will attend all meetings of the Munitions, Security and Research and Development boards. He will be executive secretary to the war council and it will be his job to keep that council advised of all decisions of those boards.

In creating the secretariat, Forrestal told his assistants of a number of near-fatal administrative blunders that occurred during the war—all due to the lack of accurate information in top spots. He aims to correct that weakness through the Ohly office.

Leva will be Forrestal's general counsel. His big job will be to coordinate the legislative program of the three departments.

The Defense Secretary can be expected to put more civilians in key spots in the military organizations. He will not resort to arbitrary or drastic action against civilians. In fact, his policy will be to encourage rather than to discourage them.

Forrestal would like to follow the British in another administrative practice—to set up permanent civilian undersecretaries, untouchable by politics, to operate the Cabinet departments. He can be sure to make this recommendation to the 12-man Hoover committee that's studying Government reorganization. He's a member of that body.

FSA: Jack B. Tate, general counsel of Federal Security; is reported to be the next top-ranking official who will leave the Federal Security Agency since its change of leadership.

OSRD: This is one war agency that has paid big dividends for an extension of its life. This is the story as told by Dr. Vannevar Bush, director of the Office of Scientific Research and Development, and recently named chairman of the new Research and Development Board in the Office of National Defense:

The OSRD was given $50,000 on July 1 to renegotiate its wartime research contracts with universities. It has already recovered $500,000. A total of several millions has been recovered during the past two years and the money turned over to the Treasury.

The odd part of the story is this—the negotiations were purely voluntary. The universities could have kept the money, but most of them took the position that they didn't want to make a profit out of the war.

OSRD is about through with its work and will soon pass into history.

Truck Crash Kills Driver

Baltimore, Oct. 4 (AP).—Warren Hamilton, about 40, of Churchville, was fatally injured early today when a bakery truck he was driving crashed and caught fire on the Pulaski highway between Edgewood and Aberdeen.

Paradise Herd Leads Dairy Milk Output

Manassas, Va., Oct. 4 (Spl.).—The Paradise Farm herd, C. C. Lynn owner, Manassas, led the Prince William County Dairy Herd Improvement Association during September, according to the monthly report of Boyed E. Shaner, jr., testing supervisor. The Paradise herd made an average of 39.8 pounds butterfat and 1226 pounds milk per cow. Twenty-two herds, including 818 cows, were tested for the month.

Second highest production was that of the J. F. Hale & Son Farm herd at Nokesville, which averaged 37.0 pounds butterfat and 753 pounds milk per cow. The Clover Hill Farm herd, Manassas, placed third with an average production of 33.8 pounds butterfat and 760 pounds milk, while the herd of Dr. John Iden, Manassas, was fourth with a production of 33.5 pounds butterfat and 893 pounds milk. Francis M. Lewis' herd, Manassas, made the fifth highest record, with an average of 31.5 pounds butterfat and 866 pounds milk per cow. The herd of Wilmer M. Kline, Buckhall, was sixth, averaging 30.7 pounds butterfat and 742 pounds milk.

Work on the Milford Mills Bridge where Route 28 crosses Broad Run is nearing completion, and the new structure is expected to be open for traffic in November, according to announcement of the Blackwell Engineering Co., Warrenton, contractors. The company, which also is constructing the Bland's Ford Bridge on Route 234 at Lake Jackson, announced that progress on the project would be delayed until spring because of the inability to obtain steel.

A hundred exhibits of time and energy savers will be featured at the Labor-Saving Show to be held in the Manassas High School gymnasium Thursday, from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. Most of the exhibits will be sent here by the Agricultural Extension Service which is sponsoring the show in cooperation with the local county agent and home agent and a committee of farm men and women.

The Town Council of Manassas this week authorized the purchase of traffic lights for Center Street at Battle and Main.

D. C. Editor to Conduct W. & L. Press Forum

Lexington, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—Ben McKelway, editor of the Washington Evening Star, will open the second annual journalism assembly series of Washington and Lee University Monday evening when he lectures and conducts a forum on the subject of editorial work in the Nation's Capital.

The group will also hear McKelway's views on the importance of education as a means of raising newspaper standards to meet the responsibilities imposed by freedom of the press.

Auto Check Urged in Va. At Fixed Fee

Richmond, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—Col. C. W. Woodson, jr., superintendent of State police, outlined today a suggested system for State-owned and operated motor vehicle inspections to be financed by a flat fee of $1.50 per vehicle per year.

Appearing before the Virginia Advisory Legislative Council, which is making a study of the inspection problem at the request of Governor Tuck, Colonel Woodson estimated that the proposed system, covering semiannual inspections would be self-supporting, and that receipts also would amortize cost of buildings and equipment during the first two years.

The council also heard spokesmen for automobile groups and individual motorists. J. T. Timmons, managing director of Tidewater Automobile Association, told the council that from an educational point of view inspections should be performed, but that they should not be carried out as at present by privately owned garages.

Both Timmons and G. Wise Wescott of the Automobile Club of Virginia suggested increased road checks on a year-round basis, with the use of an enlarged State police force, checks covering vehicle and driver.

Colonel Woodson submitted a statement in which it was suggested that 18 permanent inspection buildings, incorporating 25 inspection lanes, would be required in the following localities on the basis of current motor vehicle registration figures: Abingdon, Christiansburg, Roanoke, Martinsville, Danville, Halifax, Lynchburg, Staunton, Charlottesville, Harrisonburg, Winchester, Alexandria, Fredericksburg, Richmond, Petersburg, Newport News and Norfolk.

Fifteen portable, or floating lanes, were suggested to handle the rest of the State.

He estimated the cost of land and buildings at $397,638, equipment at $181,500 and the annual operating cost at $533,376. He said on the basis of present registrations in Virginia, this would leave a surplus of approximately $75,000 per year, which would allow for fluctuations and repairs, salary increases and possible error in estimates. The estimated operating costs included salaries for 182 inspectors, 33 supervisors and 6 clerks.

"The inspections would be conducted by impartial State employes having no interest in a selling program," Colonel Woodson said. "It provides a method whereby motor vehicle owners may have necessary corrections made at a place, and by the method, of their choice.

Presbyterians To Meet Again At Rehoboth

Rehoboth, Md., Oct. 4 (AP).—Presbyterians from the North and South will meet for the first time since the Civil War at Old Rehoboth Church Monday and Tuesday.

Their main topic of discussion will be a reunion of the long-split Northern and Southern Presbyterian communions in the United States.

They will inaugurate a year of study and comment on a "plan of reunion." Eight years of negotiations already have produced agreement on all but a few points.

At the end of the year the presbyteries in the two organizations will vote on a final contract. Two-thirds of those in the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America — the Northern group — must approve, and three-fourths of those in the Presbyterian Church in the United States—the Southern group.

Coming here for the two-day session are about 150 ministers and laymen of the New Castle Presbytery of the Northern church and the Norfolk Presbytery of the Southern church.

The scene of the meeting is a church which Pastor Francis Makemie deeded "forever" to the Presbyterian communion in 1708. He came from northern Ireland to the United States in 1683 and used Rehoboth for a headquarters. By 1706 he had organized the first presbytery in the United States and it met at Philadelphia.

Dr. Hermann Bischof, pastor at Rehoboth for 25 years, has arranged the conference program. It will include business sessions, luncheons, dinners and worship services. The first meeting is at 1:30 p. m. Monday.

Among those who will participate are Dr. William Barrow Pugh of Philadelphia, stated clerk of the Northern group's general assembly; Dr. J. B. Green of Decatur, Ga., moderator in 1946 of the Southern church's general assembly; Dr. John H. Gardner of Baltimore; Dr. W H. Squires of Norfolk and Jasper Crane of Wilmington, Del., a leading layman in the Northern church.

Vepco Ruling To Be Fought By Richmond

Richmond, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—The City of Richmond plans to appeal the precedent-setting decision of the State Corporation Commission in denying the city's petition for reassessment of local property of Virginia Electric & Power Co.

The city attorney's office said today the case would be taken to the State Supreme Court, and Mayor Horace H. Edwards, who initiated the tax fight with VEPCO, said it would be prosecuted with vigor.

The case went before the SCC nearly two years ago, with the city seeking to have VEPCO property assessed at a higher rate than the 40 per cent of true value formula employed by the SCC. The city contended that its assessment of other real estate was made on the basis of 100 per cent.

The SCC said simply "no error exists in the assessment and ascertainment of the value of the real and tangible personal properties of Virginia Electric & Power Co. . . ."

That the decision would be appealed to the State Supreme Court had been indicated. Henry R. Miller, assistant city attorney, said that "from the beginning" the city had planned to appeal in event it lost the case.

In an opinion written by Commissioner L. McCarthy Downs, and concurred in by Chairman H. Lester Hooker and Commissioner Harvey B. Apperson, it was stated:

"On the whole it appears from the evidence that the assessment made by the commission . . . is in line with values fixed for assessment purposes on comparable property by the local authorities."

The SCC order was based on two reasons, the opinion said, and "either one or both of these findings result in a denial of the city's petition and we might have addressed our attention to only one or the other."

Dog's Barking Leads Searchers to Body

Gettysburg, Pa., Oct. 4 (AP).—Attracted by a dog's barking, a searching party today found the body of a 20-year-old Gettysburg College student almost 24 hours after he left for pistol-shooting practice in a quarry.

Coroner C. G. Crist said Harold Z. Zinn, Gettysburg, was the victim of his own pistol which apparently discharged accidentally and sent a bullet into his heart.

Zinn's dog was tied to a nearby tree in Bushman's Quarry located about a quarter of a mile from the Civil War battlefield here.

1500 Attend Horse Show At Greenway

The annual competition of the McLean Horse Show Association was run off in perfect weather yesterday at the Madeira School show ring, Greenway, Va.

Nearly 1500 horse lovers from the Washington area, and from nearby Maryland and Virginia, attended.

In the hunter championships, Eve's Star, ridden by Miss Eve Prime of Warrenton, Va., won top place. The reserve (second place) hunter championship went to Beale Walk, owned and ridden jointly by Vice Admiral and Mrs. Forrest P. Sherman of 4611 Kenmore dr. nw.

Lucon, owned and ridden by Miss Diana Davies, a student at the Madeira School, was top honors in the working hunter championship competition. The second place winner was Bill's Laff, owned and ridden by Miss Shelley Lee Warren of 3000 Tilden st. nw.

In the jumper class, Fitzrada, owned and ridden by Miss Jane C. Pohl of Leesburg, Va., was the winner. Reserve honors in the jumper class went to Gray Lark, owned and ridden by Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Hallman, who live west of 16th st. extended, Silver Spring, Md.

Va. Officials Bid To Road Parley

Richmond, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—Governor Tuck today urged Virginia county and municipal officials to make every effort to attend the first annual Virginia highway conference at Virginia Military Institute at Lexington October 31 and November 1.

"The conference should be of great benefit to those concerned with road and street problems," the Governor said. "It will provide an opportunity for frank and open discussion of these problems and should do much to bring about wider cooperation and understanding."

Included on the program will be Thomas H. MacDonald, United States Public Roads commissioner, who will speak on the national highway outlook; Senators Harry F. Byrd and A. Willis Robertson, Governor Tuck and Colgate W. Darden, jr., who was inaugurated this week as third president of the University of Virginia.

Southern Md. Fair Prizes Total $20,000

Prize money of $20,000 will be awarded to exhibitors at the annual Southern Maryland Fair, which will open at 10 a. m. tomorrow at the fair grounds in Upper Marlboro, Md., for one week.

The fair, which in previous years has run only four days, will include a horse show next Sunday as a new feature.

Openings of exhibits to entrants from any section of the State has brought the largest number of cattle entries in the history of the fair, according to John Farrell, secretary-treasurer of the association. Prior to this year participants were restricted to the five southern Maryland counties.

Livestock and poultry will be judged in the first two days. Farm and household products, hogs and sheep will be judged Wednesday, and beef cattle Thursday. The fair committee, Mrs. Helen R. Welch, has announced that exhibition buildings have been renovated and painted.

A special feature will be a pulling contest under the regulations of the Horse and Mule Association of America, scheduled for 1 p. m. Friday.

The household arts section, under the supervision of Mrs. Virginia Sims, chairman of the ladies' committee, will show needlework of all types, home-cooked and canned foods, plants and flowers.

The horse show will include 21 classes, with ribbons and money prizes. Hunter and jumper class winners will receive championship ribbons. Judges will be Hugo Hoffman and Henry A. Dentry of Baltimore, and Mrs. Rhoda C. Bowling of Upper Marlboro.

Grade Crossing Crash-Toll Is 12 In Va. This Year

Richmond, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—State police reported today that in the first eight months of this year at least 12 persons died in train-motor vehicle collisions at grade crossings in Virginia.

The 12 lost their lives in seven accidents which occurred between January 1 and August 31 in Burkeville and the counties of Chesterfield, Nansemond and Prince Edwards.

In the same period during 1946, nine similar accidents caused the loss of the same number of lives—12.

The State Highway Department has work under way for elimination of four grade crossings by construction of bridges and in addition, two will be done away with by relocation of secondary roads.

Lane Greets AP Members At Annapolis

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 4 (AP).—Governor Lane today welcomed members of the Chesapeake Association of the Associated Press at the executive mansion and declared "I believe in complete freedom of the press."

The Governor spoke informally at a cocktail party preceding the group's luncheon at the Annapolis Elks Club. The Governor said as a member of the Associated Press he was delighted to welcome his guests. Lane is president of the Hagerstown Herald-Mail.

Welcoming the Associated Press besides the Governor were Mrs. Lane and their two daughters, Dorothy and Jean, and Mrs. Lane's mother, Mrs. Lewis T. Byron.

After cocktails the group went to the club, where they were guests of the Annapolis Evening Capital. Talbot T. Speer, publisher of the Capital and president of the association, which is composed of Maryland and District of Columbia newspapers, and E. M. Jackson, jr., vice president and general manager of the Capital, were hosts at the luncheon.

The group included Herbert F Corn, managing editor of the Washington Star; Frank Dennis assistant managing editor of The Washington Post; W. T. Delaplaine, copublisher of the Frederick Post; H. L. Cooling, editor of the Baltimore Sunday Sun; Edwin Young, city editor of the Evening Sun; Harry H. Robinson, managing editor of the Cumberland News; Arnold Daane, publisher of the Cambridge Banner; Oscar L. Morris, of the Salisbury Times; R. Hammond Elliott, managing editor of the Capital, Speer and Jackson; Robert L. Smith, general manager of the Charleston Gazette; George Porter, State editor of the Washington Star; C. H. Meredith and Hugh B. Hostetter of the Hanover (Pa.) Evening Sun; Eugene P. Gunning, assistant managing editor of the Cumberland Times; Joseph Harp, managing editor of the Hagerstown Herald-Mail; Henry Decker of the Frederick Post; Max Fullerton, chief of the Baltimore Associated Press Bureau; Huell Warren, day news editor of the Baltimore AP Bureau, and John P. Trimmer, Associated Press correspondent at Annapolis.

The association held a business meeting aboard the State yacht Potomac, which took them to Cambridge, Md., for an overnight stop.

Morris presided over the business meeting, which included a discussion of the progress of the Maryland Associated Press State service.

An election of officers followed, with Harry H. Robinson, managing editor of the Cumberland News succeeding Morris as chairman.

The party is scheduled to return to Annapolis tomorrow to meet Vice Admiral Sir William Tennant, commander of America and West Indies station of the British fleet.

Prince Georges To Have First Women Jurors

"Ladies and gentlement of the jury." this term will be used in addressing juries in Prince Georges County, Md., for the first time in the hostory of the county tomorhow when October term of Circuit Court convenes in Upper Marlboro, Md.

Twelve women are included in the venire list and it is probable that at least some of them will be among the 23 drawn for service on the October grand jury, which will be selected as the first business of the court.

W. Desmond Walker, 43, Mitchellville tobacco and dairy farmer, has been made foreman of the grand jury. As soon as the 22 other members are drawn, the body will begin study of criminal cases submitted by State's Attorney A. Gwynn Bowie. The State's attorney said 109 cases have been prepared for presentation but this number may be increased either by action of the grand jury or additional cases coming to his attention.

Among the cases awaiting action by the Grand Jury is that of Mrs. Katherine Weaver, 39, of 3802 37th ave., Cottage City, alleged to have shot and mortally wounded her husband, Joseph Weaver, 43, on July 2.

The Jury also is expected to consider the charges of abduction against James Francis Hampson, 24, of Arlington, Va., charged with having abducted a 17-year-old East Riverdale girl last May. Frank J. Wentling, 32, of Washington, charged with attempted rape of a 34-year-old Hillside woman, also is among those whose cases are to be presented.

In another case, a former Washington policeman, Thomas C. Chembers, 26, and William P. Brown, 30, both of Washington, are charged with criminally assaulting a 24-year-old Washington woman in June.

Henn Quads Go To Their Home

Baltimore, Oct. 4 (AP).—The Henn quadruplets went home today, 9½ months after they were born in St. Agnes Hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henn picked up their three boys and a girl to take them to a specially built hom ein suburban Catonsville. The children were kept at the hospital since birth while the house was built.

The parents had been living with his folks who had insufficient room for four more.

The babies now weigh betwee 17 and 19 pounds.

The Henns were married in England where they met while he wa stationed there with the Arm during the war. They have an other boy.

Area News in Brief

Punishing Tipsy Spouse Costs Wife $125 Fines

Mrs. Sue Ella Morton, 24, of 627 Rhode Island ave. nw. is quite a woman when aroused, Pvt. L. E. Anderson of No. 2 Precinct testified in Municipal Court yesterday.

Anderson testified that when he investigated a commotion in the 1600 block of 6th st. nw. Friday night he found Mrs. Morton repeatedly picking her husband up from the street and throwing him down again, meanwhile kicking and stomping on his head.

Her husband, Norman, 30, told Judge George D. Neilson that he had been "very drunk" and didn't remember "anything except going up to the front door and my wife coming."

Judge Neilson, agreeing with Anderson that it was "pretty brutal," gave Mrs. Morton a $100 fine or assault charge and $25 or 25 days on a disorderly conduct charge.

Record Is Returned

A 1747 Prince William County Va., document, thought to have been removed during the Civil War, has been returned to the State, it was announced yesterday in Richmond.

The document, a list of 387 males "between Cedar Run and Bull Run in Dettingen Parish" assessed for taxes, was returned by a Wollaston, Mases., resident, according to Randolph Church, State librarian.

The time-yellowed document is a valuable reference, Church said, as most of the early records of Prince William County have ben destroyed.

Middies Honor War Dead

A memorial to United States Naval Academy graduates, class of 1911, who lost their lives in service, was dedicated by their classmates yesterday at Annapolis, Md.

Capt. T. Starr King (retired) of Annapolis, class president, gave a brief commemorative talk at the dedication of a black marble drinking fountain and adjoining benches on Stribling Walk.

Vice Admiral Harry W. Hill, National War College commandant, arranged the ceremony.

John Marshall Wins

John Marshall Grammar School defeated Barcroft School yesterday in a WTOP Quizdown broadcast from Thomas Jefferson Junior High School auditorium in Arlington, Va.

Members of the John Marshall team included Grace Munson, Nicholas Carrera, Charles Murray, James Todd, Marleen Moore and George Publos.

The Barcroft team included Diane Kremkau, Mickey Waldrop, Cynthia Myers, Suellen Mann, Philip Chesser and Mert Norton.

All are from the fourth to sixth grades.

The Marshall team won a 19-volume encyclopedia for their school and pens for themselves. Both schools received table model radios. Prizes were awarded by the Hecht Co., sponsor of the radio show.

The Worm Turns

The plaintiff became the defendant yesterday in Municipal Court.

Harry Hande, 24, of 3222 19th st. nw., told Judge George D. Neilson that Henry T. Etter, 38, of 117 11th st. se., struck him on the head with a whisky bottle in front of the Carolina Theater and took $8 from him.

Etter, charged with assault, was placed under $300 bond and granted a jury trial November 21.

But as Hande left the courtroom police invited him to Judge Armand Scott's courtroom, where Hande admitted Etter had not taken the $8 from him, and that he was only trying to make trouble for him.

Judge Scott sentenced him to 30 days' imprisonment or $25 fine for making a false report.

Really Burned

A 24-year-old man, so burned up by a family argument that he set fire t oa neighbor's car, was placed under $1000 bond for grand jury action yesterday.

George M. Turner, 1214½ st. se., said he was so angry he wanted to burn down the whole block. Police testified in Municipal Court that Turner first poured gasoline on furniture in two rooms in his home, and when that failed to ignite poured kerosene on the automobile outside and ignited it.

Turner pleaded guilty to an arson charge, and Judge George D. Neilson ordered him held for grand jury action.

Blue Plains Services

Washington churches are providing religious services on a voluntary basis for residents of the Blue Plains Home for the Aged and Infirm, the Welfare Department stated yesterday.

Other local groups, including the D. C. Red Cross chapter and the Marine Corps auxiliary, are providing entertainment and refreshments for the residents, Welfare officials said.

Mrs. Ada Welch, social worker at the institution, said Catholic, Episcopalian and Baptist services will be conducted by Washington clergymen today.

Va. Registration Over

Yesterday was the last day on which Virginians could register for the November 4 elections. Marylanders hmave until November 1 to declare their intention of voting in 1948.

Nearby Virginia registrars reported some last-minute activity in new registrants, but official figures on last-minute signers were not available. In Maryland, election laws require that a new registrant "declare his intention" of becoming a voter at least one year prior to the first election in which he may cast a vote.

Montgomery County officials have arranged supplemental boards of registry to act on declarations. Prince Georges County residents must register at the county buildings in Marlboro and Hyattsville.

Va. Parks Set Record

Virginia's seven parks and four recreational areas were visited by a record 704,143 persons, during the 1947 season, Randolph Odell, State director of parks, said yesterday in Richmond.

Odell said attendance for the season, which closed Wednesday, was 182,820 above the 521,323 figure for recreation seekers during the 1946 season.

College Boys Jailed

Six of 35 members of a Gettysburg, Pa., college raiding party were in the Westminster (Md.) Jail yesterday for splashing paint on Western Maryland College buildings.

Forest Free, Western Maryland dean of men, said the students were penalized by being released too late to attend the afternoon football game.

Free said Gettysburg College officials agreed to make restitution for any property damage.

Two nights earlier, Western Maryland students staged a "paint party" at Gettysburg, painting up the radio announcing booth on the football field.

Jail in 2-Part Time

Two Frederick County, Va., farm workers convicted of failing to send their children to school were scheduled to begin their two part jail sentences last night.

The men, Henry Crounse af Stephens City and Clarence Turbin of Whiteacre, under an agreement with Trial Justice W. Earl Edwards were to report to the jail in Winchester by 6 o'clock last night and remain until Monday morning. They are to return next Friday and remain until the following Monday.

Judge Edwards, who found the men guilty of violating the Virginia compulsory education law, agreed to the split jail terms so the fathers would not be deprived of their livelihood.

Halloween Fun Planned

Clubs in the Chevy Chase-Bethesda area working under the name of the Community Service Council are sponsoring Halloween parties for young people throughout the community, John R. Reeves, president announced yesterday.

Inaugurated last year as a measure against Halloween pranks, the project won acclaim. Parties will be held in the Bethesda and Chevy Chase elementary schols, at the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Recreation Center and the River Road School. On the council are representatives of the Kiwanis, Rotary, Civitan, Lions Clubs and the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce.

Judge Admonishes Couple

Mutual "sympathy and understanding" is required of a husband and wife who see little of each other, a Baltimore magistrate counseled yesterday.

Mrs. James Burns, 35, gets home from her night work in a burlesque show chorus pretty late. Her husband, 29, gets up at 5 a. m. to drive a bus. When she came home they argued and he hit her, the court was told.

In addition to advice, Magistrate Thomas L. Fitzpatrick gave Burns a 15-day suspended sentence on an assault charge.

Dinner at Bethesda

First fall dinner meeting of the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce will be held tomorrow at 7 p. m. in the Kenwood Country Club.

Births Up 20%

District births increased more than 20 per cent during the first 39 weeks of 1947, the Health Department revealed yesterday.

Births totaled 21,486 during the period, compared with 17,707 for the same period last year.

Deaths declined from 6479 in the period last year to 6313 this year, health officials said.

Md. Cattle Judgers Win

A four-man Maryland livestock judging team won first place in an inter-state competition sponsored by the National Dairy Cattle Congress at Waterloo, Iowa, Friday.

The Free State team included Alan T. Hill and James Moxley, jr., both of Howard County; Hedwig Heineman, Washington County, and William Curry, jr., Calvert County.

Lane Appoints Md. Highway Advisory Body

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 4 (AP).—Declaring he wanted "the best advice and assistance that are obtainable" to help him discharge the "enormous responsibility" of rehabilitating Maryland's highways, Governor Lane today named a seven-man advisory committee.

Headed by Howard Bruce of Baltimore, the group will be known as the State Highway Advisory Council.

Lane said he appointed the council because "the rehabilitation and reconstruction of our highway system, involving the expenditure of over $160,000,000, is an enormous responsibility.

"The State Roads Commission and I are fortunate to be able to have the benefit of counsel and advice of these gentlemen, who are deeply interested in the future development of the State and who have very generously made available their time for this service without compensation."

Governor Lane said much of the detail work necessary for the program has been completed and "the consideration and decision upon not only major policies but specific projects can now proceed promptly."

Bruce, a Baltimore banker and engineer who was director of materiel for the War Department in the last war, said he would call a meeting of the committee "immediately."

The other committee members are:

Chester F. Hockley of Baltimore, president of the Davison Chemical Corp.

T. Howard Duckett of Hyattsville, president of the Maryland Bankers Association. and former president of the Maryland Bar Association.

J. McKenny Willis, jr. of Easton, president of the Easton National Bank.

J. Vincent Jamison, jr., of Hagerstown, chairman of the board of the Jamison Cold Storage Door Co., and Secretary of Hagerstown Herald and Mail Publishing Co.

J. Truman Thompson of Baltimore, professor civil engineering and head of the department of civil engineering of Johns Hopkins University.

Chairman Bruce is a former member of the State Roads Commission.

Governor Lane described the council's function as "supplemental and collateral to the administration of the State Road Commission. It will advise with the Governor and the commission on the full development of a master plan for and in consideration of revenue bond expressway possibilities.

Robert M. Reindollar, State Roads Commission chairman, commented that it would "be a distinct pleasure to work with this group of men the Governor has selected for the job."

"With the amount of work we must get underway," he said, "and with the necessity of a properly balanced program between roads meeting modern highway standards and keeping our present system in serviceable condition, it is highly desirable to have a representative group such as this to give the State Roads Commission the benefit of the best advice obtainable, both from the standpoint of financing and the selection of projects on a proper schedule of priority."

Bruce was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal by President Truman for his accomplishments in getting supplies and ammunition to the European and Pacific battlefronts.

Hillcrest Home for Children To Mark 132d Anniversary

By Bessie Hackett

Post Reporter

A far cry from the four-room house with lean-to on 10th st., rented in 1828 to care for the Capital's homeless children, is Hillcrest—a children's village (officially known as the Washington City Orphan Asylum), which will celebrate its 132d anniversary with an open house on October 10, 4 to 6 p. m.

A far cry, too, from the popular idea of an "orphanage" are the four fieldstone cottages on 14 acres of gently sloping, wooded ground at the corner of Nebraska ave. and Van Ness st.

The 65 or so boys and girls who live at Hillcrest dress like any other children . . . in fact, the girls learn to wear "type" clothes—greens for blondes, rose for brunettes, etc. The youngsters attend public schools and the neighborhood church of their choice, are encouraged to make outside friends and invite them to Hillcrest. And they may keep pets—at the moment these comprise a hutchful of rabbits and two dogs.

Cottages Separately Staffed

Each of the three cottages used for housing has its own matron, dietitian and kitchen. Hearty meals with plenty of milk are served and the children are seated at small tables.

There is a certain amount of discipline and routine, of course. Regular study periods are enforced and, as they would if they lived in the average home, the older children help with clearing the table and doing the dishes. Boys rake leaves and grass and sometimes help in the vegetable garden. They have their workshop, too, where they make shelves and bookends. Play time usually means baseball, football or basketball. The older girls spend after-study hours weaving scarfs and kerchiefs or knitting as they listen to the radio in the parlor of Madison Cottage, named for the orphanage's first directress. This handiwork is offered for sale.

Of the children at Hillcrest today, ranging in age from 5 to midteens, some are orphans, some are rejected youngsters from hopelessly broken homes, others are there only until their parents can find suitable housing or are financially able to care for them.

Parents May Visit

Parents may visit their children and are invited to the many special events—the "sunshine party" on the last Sunday of the month, Christmas, Hallowe'en and other celebrations.

Founder of the orphanage was a Washington woman, Marcia Burns Van Ness, wife of a New York Congressman.

In 1926 Mrs. Calvin Coolidge broke the ground purchased for new buildings at the present location. When Edwin Gould provided money to build the cottage bearing his name, he suggested, for unofficial usage, the more homelike name of Hillcrest, a Children's Village. Since 1815, 4500 children have been cared for.

An endowed institution, Hillcrest depends for its income on the generosity of civil-spirited citizens.

P-TA Meets Tuesday

The Falls Church (Va.) P-TA will meet Tuesday at 8 p. m. in the auditorium of the Madison School. Mrs. Mark Regan, president of the Fairfax County Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations, will speak on the county school system.

GOP Replies To Democrats On Va. Vote

Pearisburg, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—The Collins-Fenwick vote contest which resulted in Wise County ballots being thrown out and gave the State's lieutenant governorship to Lewis Preston Collins of Marion had crept into the southwest Virginia Republican-Democratic exchange of charges today.

GOP State Chairman Robert H. Woods, whose statement that wide abuses existed in execution of the absentee voters law in that area touched off the controversy, today answered a Democratic reply to his remarks.

The Wise County Democratic executive committee had issued a statement that "any person can get any notary to take care of the legal provisions of balloting by mail under the Virginia absentee voter law." The GOP chairman earlier had charged that notaries were being commissioned for purely political reasons.

Woods pointed to the Democratic primary in 1945, when Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington apparently had received the nomination for lieutenant governor, only to lose it when a contest brought by Collins in Wise County brought cancellation of that county's vote.

"They (the Wise Democratic executive committee) know and know well how irregularities permitted in Wise County were condoned by a court in the Collins-Fenwick affair," Woods said, continuing:

"The committee will, of course, bear in mind that the Collins-Fenwick affair was a Democratic primary carried on not by the Republican Party but by Democrats and it was in this same Wise County that the court declared in effect that Fenwick had been illegally nominated.

"The Republican Party will never willingly submit to the black satchel methods so brazenly defended by the Democratic executive committee of Wise County," he added.

Voting Survey Begins On Absentee Law

Richmond, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—The State Board of Elections today disclosed it had begun a survey to determine whether it might recommend changes in the absentee voting set-up for consideration by next year's General Assembly.

The question "do you favor abolishing the absent voters law" was among 14 queries included in questionnaire which Levin Nock Davis, secretary of the State board, sent to nearly 400 local election officials in Virginia. Davis said he also planned to send similar inquiries to leaders of both major political parties.

Hagerstown Strike Conference Futile

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 4 (AP).—A stalemate ended the conference today between officials of the Colonial Hardwood Flooring Co. and the striking United Furniture Workers, CIO, Local 472.

Originator Of Quantum Theory Dies

Berlin, Oct. 4.—Dr. Max Planck, 89, originator of the quantum theory, which provided one of the basic propositions underlying the splitting of the atom, died last night. Goettingen University clinic announced today.

Planck

A Nobel Prize winner in 1918, the German physicist had ranked with Albert Einstein as one of the world's foremost scientists.

The quantum theory which he gave to the world in 1900 was evolved from researches into the atomic structure of radiation. It modified Newton's theory of light, which had been held unassailable for 250 years, and produced revolutionary changes in physics and chemistry.

In non-technical language, the quantum theory held that each wave-length of light and of all other forms of radiation, such as heat, radio, X-rays and cosmic rays, carried its own "packet" of energy, and that each "packet" was different for the countless millions of different wave lengths of radiation.

Planck studied mathematics and natural sciences at Munich and Berlin. He was professor of physics at Kiel University in 1885, and for the most of his career after 1889 at the University of Berlin.

2 Die, 2 Escape Waynesboro Ditch Cave-in

Two men were killed and two escaped with their lives when a bank of shale and clay collapsed on them while they worked in a sewer ditch at Waynesboro, Va., yesterday.

Mack F. Shifflett of Waynesboro and Arlie Williams, of Fisherville, were dead before rescuers could remove the 14 feet of earth that entombed them.

Ed Lynn and Herman Snead, both of Waynesboro, escaped. Snead suffered shoulder injuries.

Lynn, who jumpted out when he saw the cave-in coming, summoned the Waynesboro fire department, which in turn called the Staunton fire department, 12 miles away.

The men were laying sewer pipe for a new subdivision when the accident occurred at 10:45 a. m.

Williams was planning to move his household goods to Waynesboro as soon as he finished work yesterday. His wife, waiting for him, was taken to a hospital suffing from shock.

In Memoriam

FERTIG, EMMA

The month of October once more is here
To us the saddest of the year
Because one year ago today our dear mother passed away
Dear is the place where she is laid
Sweet is the memory that will never fade
Part of our life lies buried deep
Under the ground where she sleeps
Out of our hearts comes a cry
Why, Oh, why did she have to die?
We hear an answer soft and sweet, she is not dead
She is just asleep.

Sadly missed by her children—Grace, Ruth, Maude, Edward and Raymond.

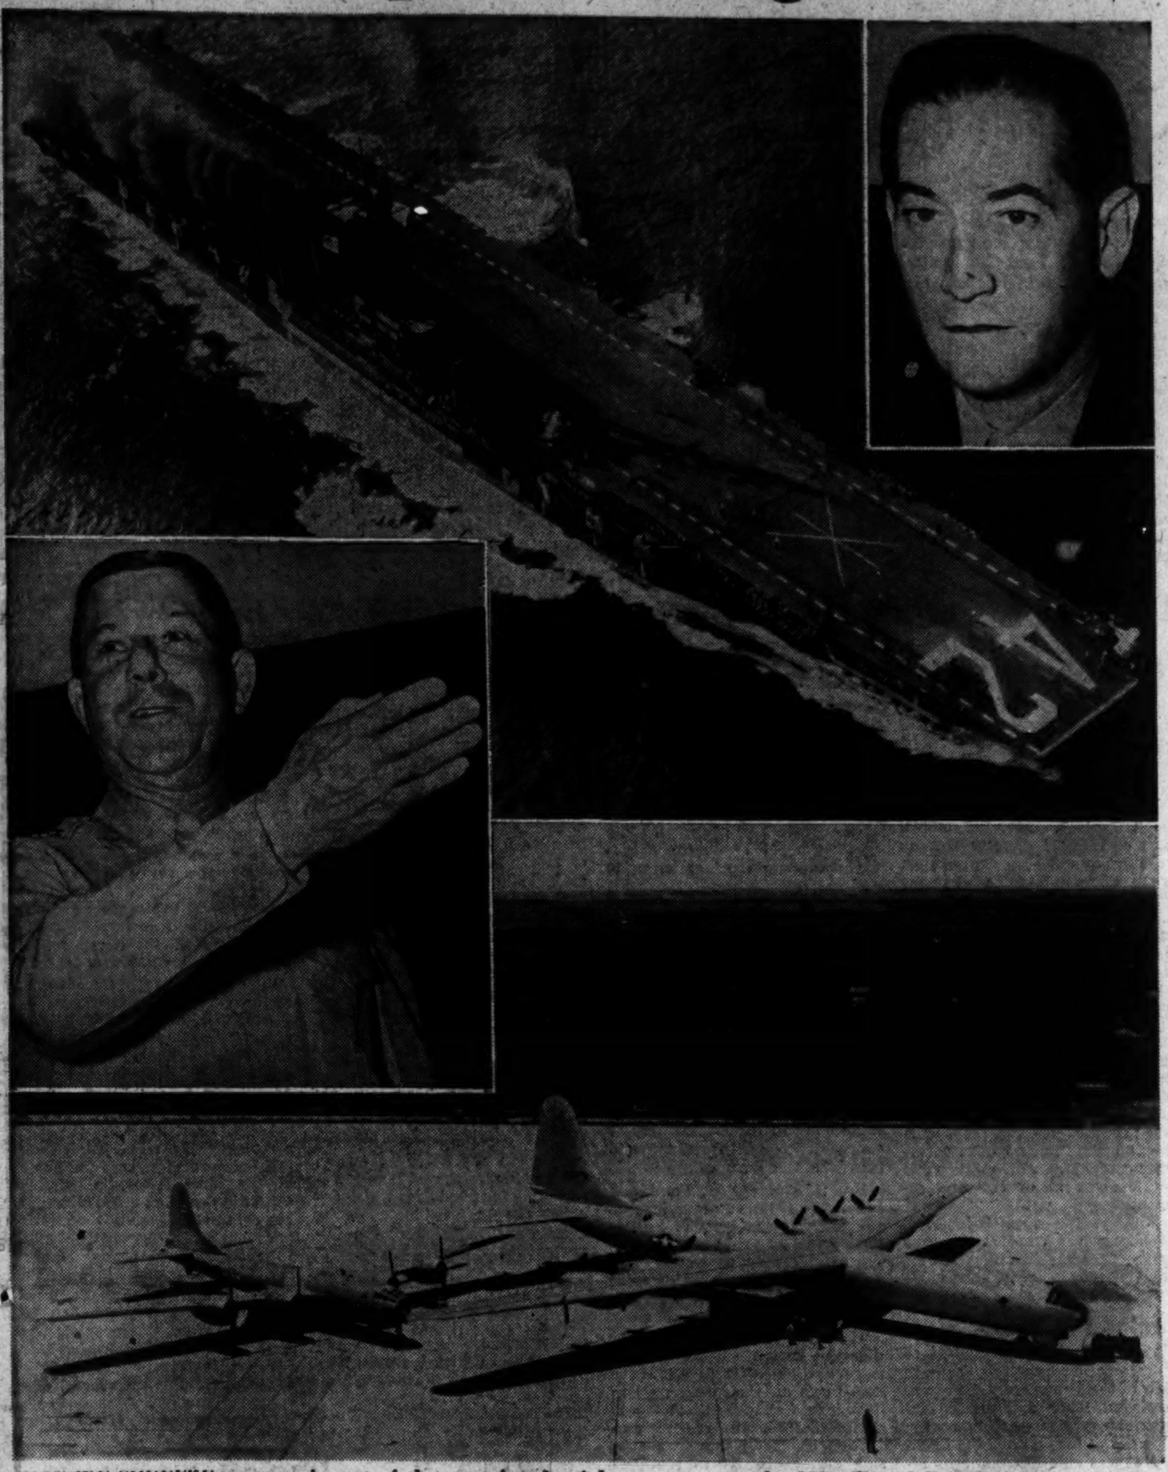
Defense Experts Disagree on Economy—and on Atomic War



CAN WE SQUEEZE any pennies out of the cost of such mighty weapons as the 110-million-dollar carrier Franklin D. Roosevelt (top), or the $3,500,000 B-36 below it? General Devers of the Ground Forces (with upraised arm) has some concrete ideas how to economize on airplanes and airfields, but General O'Donnell of the Air Force (top right), doesn't exactly go along with him in the accompanying story by John G. Norris

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

ARE national defense costs too high? Can the armed services' current 10-billion-dollar budget be trimmed or the sum spread farther by cutting corners on weapons and equipment?

If shooting starts again, can the terrific waste of war be reduced by heavy emphasis on economy—something almost entirely absent last time?

Many Army leaders answer these questions in the affimative. Moreover, they insist that we change our whole approach to the problem of military expenditures.

Too Many Gadgets

GEN. JACOB L. DEVERS, commander of the Army Ground Forces, believes that substantial savings can be made in airplane and air base building costs.

"Military planes don't need all the refinements they carry today," he declared in an interview. "In our armored divisions every tank doesn't have a complete set of instruments, radios and other such equipment. The lead tank has a damn good compass and everything it needs. The others follow it."

Not only could the principle of command or lead tanks be applied to aircraft squadrons, Devers believes, but the building of airfields for heavy bombers can be simplified.

B-36 type bombers require very long runways of especially reinforced concrete. Devers suggests that the Air Force economize by "beefing up" only a strip at each end of the runway instead of the entire length. The extra thickness is needed to withstand only the initial shock of the giant craft hitting the ground, he said.

The Army Ground Forces chief also believes that some of the special tailoring which goes into warplanes is not strictly necessary. His own outfit now is buying ordinary commercial light planes for artillery spotting and liaison work, and is entirely satisfied with them, Devers said.

Concentrated Vulnerability

RANKING Air Force officers take exception to much of this. Maj. Gen. Emmett O'Donnell, who led B-29 missions against Tokyo and now is Director of Air Information for the separate Air Force, pointed out that there would be certain obvious disadvantages to the suggestions.

"The idea of complete instrumentation on 'lead' airplanes only is rather risky in many situations," he said. "If the leader were shot down the rest of the planes might not be able to get back.

"And much depends on circumstances. In bombing Japan from the Marianas, for example, every plane was a lead airplane and had its own mission."

O'Donnell noted that when new radar bombsight equipment was scarce, we used the "lead" plane principle at times from necessity. Mixups often occurred in thick fog, however, he recalled.

As for airstrips with "beefed up" end sections, General O'Donnell said that heavily laden planes are apt to have trouble on takeoffs from fields with inadequate runways.

An aide pointed out that a badly shot up bomber might have great difficulty hitting the strengthened strip at the end of a runway.

"In short," said O'Donnell, "with the tremendous destruction made possible by the atomic bomb, we feel that we should put the best we've got into the airplanes, instruments and equipment to get it to its target."

Matter of Strategy

THE question raised by General Devers applies in a greater or lesser degree to the Army and Navy

The Iowa type battleships—one is the better known Missouri—cost an average of 104 millions. Equipped with planes, the big new carriers of the Midway class cost 110 millions each.

Cost of the first B-36 bomber was 32 millions, including tooling up for production. Subsequent B-36s will cost about 3½ millions each.

Current defense expenditures include some plane production, but there is almost no warship construction going on. We are "living off our fat" from the war. Sooner or later there will have to be large capital outlays for modern replacements.

Should we attempt to trim those major expenditures by installing cheaper gun mounts, carburetors, electronics gear, etc., that may not be as efficient but that work fairly well? The answer lies in whether we should accept the Air Force concept of the next war, or that held by the majority of top Army officers.

Disagree on Duration

AIR Force strategy is to have a powerful bomber force constantly ready—a striking arm as perfect as money can make it. The threat of retaliation by such a force will discourage an aggressor, and should assure a quick victory if war comes, airmen say.

Most Army leaders favor a strong air force but doubt that another war would be a short one. If two great powers tangled, most top generals feel, there probably would be a violent first phase in which the great cities and industrial centers of one or both countries would be blasted by atomic bombs. But they assume that the enemy army and air force would be dispersed and that a major part would survive to begin large-scale operations.

Would we then attempt to destroy a whole continent with atomic weapons in order to destroy the enemy's military might? Would not the war settle down into a long struggle for survival fought somewhat on conventional lines?

These Army officers believe that such a war would probably end in a mass invasion and a hand-to-hand decision in the mud. They say we could not fight such a war in the "plush" manner of World II. We'd have to plan from the beginning on an "austerity war."

Real Belt-Tightening

THIS would mean drafting soldiers to fight for food and cigarette money. It would mean no time-and-a-half at high wages for Rosie the riveter and grandpa on the swing shift. Instead of standing in line for rationed food, people might get hungry. In industry, there would be no surplus production of a weapon or necessity once the assembly line got rolling.

In the last war, a carrier skipper was doing the proper thing in a combat zone when he ordered a $100,000 plane thrown over the side if it crashed in landing and blocked the flight deck. There were replacement planes at the nearest base.

AAF bomber commanders took the same attitude. With replacements coming through it was not worthwhile to tie up repair crews on badly damaged aircraft.

Just before the Normandy invasion, a sharp dispute between the United States and British navies had to be taken to General Eisenhower for decision. The English naval chiefs wanted to use a large number of landing craft which were considered obsolescent. Our people argued that we should build new ones embodying the latest lessons of the Pacific war. They wanted to eliminate every possible risk.

In an "austerity war" such as Army chiefs visualize, we might be glad to get "obsolescent" equipment like that which was finally replaced before D-Day.

Let's Set the Record Straight About DPs

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

"Why call 'em displaced persons? They're all Jews."

"The DPs are all Nazi-collaborators; otherwise they'd go back to their own countries."

"The DPs are the worst black marketers in Europe."

"The DPs are lazy. They won't work. They couldn't hold jobs if they got them."

• • • •

THESE COMMENTS, illogical, inconsistent and uniformly false, are, nevertheless, commonly heard, both in America and Europe.

The truth about displaced persons has been written over and over again for more than two years. It has been written statistically and in words of fire. But misconceptions persist. As long as they do, it seems worthwhile to repeat the facts of the most tragic situation in the world today.

• • • •

Who are the DPs? Are they all Jews?

The answer is that about one fifth of the DPs are Jews.

In all Europe, there are about 1,280,000 DPs who need the help of the International Relief Organization to protect their status and rights. They must be afforded documentation, police protection, rights to jobs, social security, etc., as prescribed by international agreements.

Of this total, about 230,000, or 18 per cent, are Jews. The rest:

	Number	Per Cent
Poles	370,000	29
Balts (Latvians, Estonians, Lithuanians)	194,000	15
Yugoslavs	77,000	6
USSR	30,000	2
Stateless and undetermined	98,000	8
Other	281,000	22

By no means all of these DPs are dependent on the United Nations for economic help. A great number are seeking to make their own way "on the economy" of the country in which they now reside.

U. S. Harbors Most

IN DP CAMPS in Europe, run by the Preparatory Commission for the IRO and supported by U. N. funds, there are about 700,000 DPs. Of these, about 154,000, or 22 per cent, are Jews. Most of the Jews, 119,000, are in the American zone of Germany. Some 11,000 are in the British zone, 2000 in the French zone, 5500 in Austria and 17,000 in Italy. Something less than 50,000 more displaced Jews are outside DP camps, making their own way, in western European nations.

The national origin of the Jews in DP camps is noteworthy. Almost 80 per cent are Polish. For the most part, they migrated to Germany in the summer of 1946. The driving force was their fear of violent outbreaks of anti-Semitism in Poland.

Most of the rest of the Jews are Hungarian, Romanian and Czech. About 51,000 are German-born individuals who somehow survived the Nazi concentration camps.

No one can accuse the Jews of being Nazi-lovers. But what about the other DPs? Is it true that they were collaborators, that they were not "slave laborers" but rather that they voluntarily went to Germany during the war to get jobs?

Again the answer is no. For two years military authorities have carefully screened the DP camps for just such persons. They are not difficult to spot. Ten to 15 per cent of the DP camp inhabitants have been ejected as belonging to that category. Of those who remain, there may be a scattering of former Nazi-friends.

But it is clear that the great majority, Balts, Poles, Balkans and others, were slave laborers, with every reason in the world to hate the Germans. That many of them also hate the Russians is beyond doubt.

But it cannot be argued that merely because a Lithuanian, for example, refuses to return to his native Riga because he is opposed to and fears communism and does not wish to live under Russian rule, that he is therefore a Nazi.

The DPs are supposed to be black marketers, and so they are. So is almost everyone else in Germany. American visitors and the occupation forces should be the last ones to cast a stone.

But whereas the GI—and the officer—black market cigarettes and chocolate for jewelry, porcelain, valuable personal possessions and women, the DPs swap what little they have for fruit, vegetables and worn-out junk to use in their miserable camps.

Fred M. Hechinger, education reporter for The Washington Post, has just spent four weeks of intensive investigation of the DPs. He has lived with them, eaten their fare, visited dozens of camps and talked to hundreds of them. Here is his comment on the black market question:

Of course, the DPs are in the black market. If they weren't they would be the

The school and the workshop are the focal points of any DP camp, as the inmates strive for knowledge and skills that will make them useful citizens of any nation which will have them. These Jewish DPs are learning dentistry in a camp near Munich

Delegates Realize World Looks to Washington

Europe's Crisis Haunts Debates at U. N.

By Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr.
Post Reporter

LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y., Oct. 4.—One issue dominates all the rest of this Assembly —and it is not even on the agenda.

One question takes precedence over all others: whether the United States will act quickly to avert "intolerable hunger and cold" in Europe this winter.

With it, a related question arises in the minds of delegates. It is whether the United States will underwrite western Europe's economic recovery, along the lines of the Marshall Plan.

Because these questions can be answered only in Washington, and not at Lake Success, this Assembly has an odd sense of unreality about it.

The flags of all the 57 United Nations make a brave show outside the building. The committee rooms are crowded. The debates are earnest. Yet it doesn't seem to matter as much as many delegates thought it would a few months ago.

Most delegates know in their hearts that they are not playing the determining part at this moment of world history.

Hunger Can Be Deafening

WHEN hundreds of millions are hungry and cold, what does it matter if the Assembly passes a resolution to condemn the three northern neighbors of Greece, or to urge "restraint" in the use of the veto, or to codify international law?

What difference will it make, for that matter, if the United States lines up 30, 40 or even 50 delegations to outvote Russia? How can the Assembly hope to stir the conscience of mankind if a large part of mankind does not know where its winter food and warmth will come from?

These are some of the reasons why many delegates suspect that their speeches sound hollow, their resolutions unreal, their disputes unimportant.

One must not imagine that the western Europeans are the only ones here who are preoccupied with the food and fuel crisis, and with their economic recovery. The Russians and their friends are also keeping an ear cocked in the direction of Washington.

"It is no accident," as the Russians are fond of saying in their propaganda, that Andrei Vishinsky found it necessary to attack the Marshall Plan in his opening speech to the Assembly. It is no accident that Oscar Lange of Poland saw fit to attack the Marshall Plan, and at the same time to plead wistfully for European economic cooperation in his first speech to the Assembly's economic committee.

The Russians and their friends have half convinced themselves that the Marshall Plan will lead, as they say, to "no positive result." Yet their speeches here have shown them conscious of American economic power, conscious that the United States holds the trump card, if it wants to use it, to keep western Europe free.

Forum Becomes Loudspeaker

IF MILITARY TERMS were appropriate, the proceedings at this Assembly so far might be called "the windy war." From the first day it has been a struggle between the United States and Russia, but it has been a queer struggle of sound and fury signifying less than one might guess from the headlines.

Its weapons are speeches and resolutions; its objectives, to win men's minds. Virtually every one of the 60 items on the agenda is being pressed into service in this struggle, on one side or the other. It is not a happy fate to have befallen the Assembly, which liked to regard itself as "the town meeting of the world."

When the Assembly was created at San Francisco, it was expected to be the one place where all the nations could meet and debate as equals, without any special privileges for the great powers. Last year Russia saw the advantages of the Assembly as a sounding-board for her own causes. This year, for the first time, the United States has followed suit.

An Instrument to Be Used

SECRETARY MARSHALL and his advisers decided that here was an instrument which needed to be used. They knew the Assembly could only "recommend" rather than act, yet it could air disputes in the sight and hearing of all the world. Within its Charter limitations it could also take certain actions on its own authority.

It could, for example, send its own commission to Greece to hold a watching brief along the troubled northern border. It could, perhaps, set up a permanent "Little Assembly"—a standing committee to meet throughout the year and debate issues that might otherwise be bottled up in the Security Council.

The first three weeks of this session have raised many doubts about the value of the Assembly as a forum.

The struggle between the United States and Russia has put a strain upon the whole conception. For one thing, there is incessant pressure upon the smaller countries to take sides. For another, there is an inevitable tendency to write every speech, every resolution, every statement to the press, as propaganda for foreign consumption.

The Americans have at last learned this art, if it can be called an art; the Russians have been practitioners of it, and often stupid practitioners, for many years.

A good illustration of this came during the recent Security Council debate over the admission of Italy to membership. The United States, quite properly, was determined to give whatever moral support it could to the anti-Communist De Gasperi government. Its delegates never spoke without knowing that their words probably would be cabled to Italy and might have some effect in keeping the Italian people from the clutches of communism.

There will be more of such propaganda in the Assembly when the political committee begins to discuss the admission of Italy and other countries vetoed by the Soviet Union. No doubt it is legal and proper—but is it what the Assembly was intended to be used for?

At first it is reassuring to see an Assembly committee in action. There, at last, are all continents, all races, all blocs, all ideologies, sitting around the same huge oval. It looks for a few moments like "the parliament of man, the federation of the world."

Most of these delegates are genuinely earnest, peace-loving men. They debate politely, for the most part, except when Vishinsky or a Yugoslav or an excitable Latin delivers a harangue. Yet somehow every speech is amplified and sharpened when it goes out to the world by wire or radio.

Summarized and dramatized, a moderate Assembly speech becomes a "challenge," a "stern warning," a "flat rejection." or something still more exciting. A vote becomes a "victory," a disagreement becomes a "boiling dispute" or, more commonly, a "battle." A speaker no longer replies to another, but "lashes back," and a delegation no longer argues but "fights."

Year-Round Jitters

A FEW WEEKS of this kind of thing, and it would be no wonder if people in many countries felt jittery and saw a new war around the corner. One shivers to think what will happen if Secretary Marshall's plan for a "Little Assembly" is approved and this kind of thing is prolonged for an entire year.

From the American point of view the Assembly is proving useful—if one regards it as an arena for winning diplomatic victories rather than as a forum for peace and understanding.

The American delegation is confident that its "Little Assembly" idea can be approved, with modifications. It believes it has the votes to set up a permanent Assembly commission on the Greek border. It has no doubt that an overwhelming majority of the nations here can be persuaded (if they need persuasion) to pass another resolution deploring Soviet use of the veto.

On all these and other contentious issues the United States probably can roll up satisfying majorities. But the Americans themselves must know that this cannot have any decisive effect in the present Soviet-American struggle. Unless Congress votes adequate stopgap help to Europe, and unless it acts along the lines of the longer-range Marshall Plan, all the American majorities in this Assembly will not be worth the breath and effort expended on them.

Spain Wants Cotton

WHILE aid for western Europe held the spotlight, Spain made an indirect and tentative approach to the Export-Import Bank for credit to finance shipment of American cotton to Spain for processing.

No formal application was submitted, however, because the initial approaches got a cool reception. Due to Spain's virtual "blacklisting" in American foreign politics, it was indicated she wouldn't have a chance.

History Teachers Still Sound Like Adding Machines

By Fred M. Hechinger

FRANKFURT, Oct. 4.—The small high school in the Hesse country town had been thoroughly denazified. Not one of the old teachers remained. The principal, a political persecutee, had seen to that.

Hopefully, I went into the first classroom. A 28-year-old teacher was conducting a German lesson for 16-year-old boys. There were no books on the desks; the teacher was reading Goethe's poems to the class.

When he had finished, he opened the "discussion." Nothing was said about the content of the poems, but their grammar and sentence structure were scientifically debated. It might have been a critique of yesterday's weather forecast.

After class, I asked the young teacher whether he was also conducting the newly introduced and required course of "civics." "Yes," he nodded, "but I don't like to. How can I teach community lessons (the German term for "civics") without a thorough background in ancient and medieval history?"

I told him that civics could be taught by establishing a student council. He had thought of that and tried it. But it would take a long time to complete a study of parliamentary history. "And then, you see," he went on, "the boys are so cynical and don't believe in anything. I don't know how we could ever get them to take a student council seriously."

Strong on Dates

I WENT to the next class. The room was overcrowded with 55 boys of about 12 years average. Again there were no books. Each youngster had a scrap of paper in front of him and was taking notes on historical dates and facts which the girl teacher threw at them.

When she made the boys "recite" the lesson, it was obvious that none knew the meaning of the Napoleonic period although they knew the date of every minor conference.

The fact that these classes had bad teachers was merely aggravated by the total lack of textbooks. "We try to overcome that to some extent," the girl told me, "by letting the boys use whatever related books they can find in their parents' libraries." The danger of that expedient is obvious. None of the private libraries has been "purged" of Nazified books.

At a high school in Frankfurt, I dropped in on a history lesson. The topic was Bismarck, and the elderly teacher was telling his group of 14-year-olds that certain things such as democracy and liberalism were good, while dictatorship, autocracy and fascism were bad. There was no discussion. Whenever a pupil answered a question, it was as though a phonograph record were being played back.

In the next class, a discussion was in progress. The teacher, an old-school German educator, was trying to comply with the law which requires some discussion of current events. It was pathetic to find how Germany still remains the center of the universe in the older boys' minds.

It is not their fault. Ten or more years of biased teaching have left their mark. And intellectual isolation has reduced the teacher's international knowledge. "Let's get back to the main point under discussion," was the excuse constantly used when an embarrassing side issue was raised.

Not Even Chalk

THE BLIND groping, the return to the old, unsatisfactory routines, the stuffiness and lack of life in the German classroom and the stiffly autocratic student-teacher relationship are thoroughly depressing. Material—from chalk to textbooks—is still almost unobtainable. But, most important, there is every indication that we have passed up our chance of guiding the German school into the channels of living democracy.

At the same time, liberal educationists agree that German youth up to the age of 16 can be reeducated.

That it is not a hopeless task became clear to me at a girls' high school in Wiesbaden.

When I entered a classroom at random, I found some 30 girls of bobby-sox age sitting around the desk of a tall, thin, but kindly teacher. The class was discussing the central character of a German novel. The hero had committed an act of cruelty, and the girls were debating the degree of his guilt. The teacher simply acted as a chairman, occasionally summarizing the conclusions. Most startling for a German "professor," he used the girls' first names.

After class, this extraordinary teacher, Herr Kniffler, told me his story. He had left Germany when Nazi pressure became too strong. When he resumed his post after the German surrender he devoted his time to progressive teaching, formation of discussion groups, establishment of a student council and personal contact with students and educators in other countries.

"Too many people think they can teach democracy by talking about it," he said. "I never even mention the word. The trick is to let the young people find the way without their knowing it."

"All these youngsters and all the other youngsters in Germany could be 'saved,'" says Dr. Kniffler. "It takes real effort, and it cannot be done with dusty, traditional methods. Above all, the boys and girls must be able to look upon their teachers as friends, not as drill-ground superiors."

In the class that followed, Dr. Kniffler showed his girls that Bismarck had purposely provoked a war with France. He did not tell them. He read all the conflicting scource material, and after the French and German versions he read the accounts of neutral, unbiased historians.

"That's the way history books should be written," one of the girls said in admiration. "They will be," answered Dr. Kniffler, "if you demand the"

Natal Feels Indian Plan Is Liberal

Special to The Washington Post

LONDON, Oct. 4.—The Union of South Africa feels that it is stretching the definition of liberalism in its attempts to be fair to its Indian minority, and that outside influences, ranging from the United Nations to India itself, are complicating a difficult job.

Writing in the Times, Sir Charles Rey of Capetown points out that the Union's "Indian problem" is concentrated in two provinces, the Transvaal and Natal. And there are pronounced differences in the origin and nature of their troubles.

Natal has 228,000 of the Union's 282,000 Asiatic population, which is mostly Indian, with a sprinkling of Chinese and Malays. The Transvaal has 37,000; the Cape, 17,000, and the Orange Free State, none. The Cape has had no particular friction.

The Transvaal's Indian community is generally Moslem, mercantile and well-to-do. Most of its members are descended from late nineteenth century immigrants who were forced into trade by an 1885 law denying them citizenship and the right to own land except in small urban "reservations." They have managed to evade the latter restriction and acquire considerable property, Sir Charles writes.

Moved 'Uptown'

NATAL'S Indians are principally the descendants of low-caste and no-caste Hindus who were imported from 1860 on as indentured labor in the sugar industry. They were given the option of remaining after their contracts were completed, and most of them did. But they deserted the sugar industry for such urban occupations as laundrymen, waiters, gardeners and furniture makers.

The trouble began, Sir Charles writes, when a few of them became prosperous enough to buy property, sometimes in European sections of towns. When the Europeans began to move out and leave whole districts to the Indians, a legislative attempt was made to regulate Indian land purchases.

However, in 1927 the government of India intervened, and it was agreed to foster remigration of the Indians to their homeland with free passage and landing bonuses. Only about 17,000 of them took the bait, and Indian infiltration increased.

In 1946, the government sponsored a law dividing Natal into "free" and "restricted" areas and giving the Indians of Natal and the Transvaal both provincial and parliamentary representation. In the "free" area of Natal, anyone can own and occupy property. In the "restricted area"—the bulk of the province—land purchase and occupancy is controlled by the government on the advice of a board which includes Indian representatives.

No Caste System

THE act grants the Indians two Indian representatives on the Provincial Council and five representatives of European parentage in the Union House and Senate. Sir Charles reports that the Indians have refused to cooperate in putting the act into effect and that some have organized a passive resistance movement.

He says the Indians' main objection is to the segregation principle of the "free" and "restricted" system, "which is regarded as vital by the European inhabitants." He adds:

"There is nothing in these measures, or in any other conditions attaching to the lives of Indians in South Africa, which remotely approaches the caste system. It may be admitted that the government should have acted at an earlier date; and with an even greater amount of truth that the local authorities should have taken steps to secure improved housing facilities for the Indians.

"The last seven years of war restrictions have, however, done something to hamper action. The present solution nevertheless is an appreciable advance on anything hitherto proposed."

Huge 'Shots' Used In Scarlet Fever

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP). Greatly enlarged doses of penicillin given only twice a day without the use of wax or other substances to retard absorption, have proved effective in treatment of scarlet fever, according to the claims of Dr. Torben Jersild of the Belgdams Hospital here. He also says his method reduces the stay in the hospital from 30 to 8 days.

Standard treatment involves injections every three hours or use of absorption retardants. Dr. Jersild claims also that his method eliminates subsidiary infections, and can be given in the home where it is possible to attain complete isolation of the patient.

His treatment has been used on 1000 patients and saved thousands of sick days and thousands of dollars, he says.

14,000,000 Divided

Warsaw (AP). — More than 14 million acres of farmlands which once were great estates, have been parceled out to peasants under the agrarian reform law in the last 300 years, says the Gazeta Ludowa. Allotments have varied from 12 to 30 acres.

Dominion Reaction Follows U. S. Pattern

Canada 'OPA' Has Familiar Wake

This is a picture of inflationary pressure on Canada, or at least on one bit of it. So many Detroiters were crossing the river to do their marketing in Windsor, Ont., a few weeks ago that the price of eggs there jumped 15 cents in a week. Canada still has the lid on meat, sugar and fats, among other items, which continues to make it a mecca for these international shoppers lined up at the Canadian customs

By Special Correspondent

SINCE September 15, when the Canadian government ended most price controls, Canada has been in the midst of the same price debate and in the grip of some of the same price pressures that followed the end of OPA.

The Wartime Prices and Trade Board's order left controls in effect on a very few of the thousands of items kept under strict regulation for six years. Items remaining under ceilings include sugar, meat and meat products, dried imported fruits and edible oils, soaps and dentifrices, some seed grains and wheat and rents.

Decontrol came as a shock and surprise to the Canadian public generally. It created the same anxieties about inflation. It set in motion the same flurry of price increases experienced in the United States. It started the same debate over the merits of free competition and government regulation. It was followed by the same resort to hortatory methods of influencing prices.

Editorial reactions were sharp, and, as in the United States, mixed. Typical of the "pro" comment is an editorial in the Montreal Daily Star. It finds the removal of controls fulfillment of the government's 1945 pledge to take them off and takes the position that the people have what they wanted. "There will be marked instances of higher prices to the consumer," the Star concedes, but it finds this hardship outweighed by "turning loose of the productive forces of industry."

Return of Quality

THE STAR noted that price control had meant the virtual end of competition. It also takes cognizance of a phenomenon of control that was observed in the United States, declaring: "Now, instead of paying $1 for two shoddy articles, we may have to pay $2 for one good article. The results, in a short time, should be beneficial to consumers." While it praises the administrators of the price law, the Star concludes that "almost all of us will hail with pleasure the return of a system which reduces government interference to a minimum and gives free play to us all in the conduct of our affairs."

Another tack is taken by such papers as the Evening Citizen of Ottawa. It points out that "Canada's price controls, her wage policy, her stabilized economic structure during the war years were the envy of the nations . . . today price controls have gone at one fell swoop. And no explanation for it is offered on behalf of the government . . ."

"No timing could have been worse," in the view of the Citizen. This Canadian paper thinks it knows what will happen next. It predicts: "Food prices will emulate the fantastic levels of those in the United States; labor's demands for more and yet more wages to meet the exaggerated costs of living will intensify; public protests against the government's ill-timed decision will resound across the Dominion . . ."

Leaven Takes Hold

HEADLINES familiar to American newspaper readers soon began to appear in the Canadian press. Large type in the Winnipeg Free Press proclaimed, "Bread Goes Up 2 Cents Tomorrow." The War Prices and Trade Board, which still controls flour, authorized flour price increases amounting to 2.2 cents per 24-ounce loaf.

The Vancouver Daily Province announced, "Bread Price Rise of 2 Cents Sure," and disclosed imminent price increases in breakfast cereals, shoes, dresses, linens, cotton goods and lumber.

The Montreal Daily Star announced, "Bread Up 3 Cents Today in Most Montreal Bakeries."

The Vancouver Daily Province headlined a 10 per cent rise in living costs due to freight rate boosts . . . 20 per cent rise in lumber prices.

Government agencies expressed hopes also heard in the United States. They anticipated that government vigilance to see that prices did not rise unreasonably would hold levels down so that the cost of living index would not go up more than 5 points in the next few weeks.

On September 23 the Montreal Star headlined, "Price Rises Ranging From 17 to 68 Per Cent on Canned and Dry Paste Foods."

Housewives March

IN THE WAKE of this kind of news the rest of the United States pattern began to unfold.

Women paraded down Sparks st. in Ottawa carrying placards announcing a protest meeting. One placard carried the legend: "Breadknives stab housewies. Put ceilings back on bread, milk, butter!"

The Winnipeg Labor Council voted unanimously to have controls restored. The Canadian Congress of Labor convention in Toronto is expected to demand that the federal government restore price control and reestablish subsidies in order to combat rising prices.

The Ottawa City Council petitioned the government to retain wheat subsidies.

The Canadian government turned to devices familiar to Americans, to stem rising prices. It announced that it would use the threat of investigation and exposure of combinations in restraint of trade and the club of publicity.

It remains to be seen whether Canadians will repeat their relative success under wartime price control. Perhaps they can make decontrol work better than it worked in the United States, just as they made control work better. In the first flush of the freest economy that Canada has had since 1939, opinions are widely divided.

The Evolution of Rationing In Our Neighbor to the North

By R. E. Moffat

(Mr. Moffat's article is reprinted in part from the September "Annals" of the American Academy of Political and Social Sciences. Mr. Moffat was an economist and pricing officer of Canada's wartime Prices and Trade Board.)

From the beginning of the war until April 1, 1947, the official cost of living index for Canada rose not quite 30 per cent against a rise of some 80 per cent in the comparable period of World War I. Meanwhile the index of wholesale prices rose not quite 70 per cent, against 150 per cent in the earlier period.

The Prices and Trade Board was set up on September 3, 1939, and one week before Canada declared war on Germany. As originally constituted and as later expanded, the board possessed within its own staff and its committee an unusually representative group of persons, from private industry, from banks, insurance companies, universities, and the professions of law and accounting.

Finally, the special interests of housewives were represented by a separate division whose function was to present the viewpoint of consumers.

Surpluses at First

OWING to heavy surpluses of many commodities and in view of the large reservoirs of unemployed labor and unused industrial capacity existing at the outbreak of the conflict, the board at first was able to confine its attention to a small group of commodities. Following the downfall of France, the situation underwent a major change.

Heavy construction programs were undertaken for the production of munitions and war supplies. At the same time Canada was called upon to provide vast quantities of food and other civilian materials for the United Kingdom.

The result was a rapid expansion in the number of persons employed in both war and civilian industry, at the same time that the Army, Navy, and Air Force were being recruited. By the spring of 1941 this process had reached the point where shortages of many materials and some types of labor began to be felt. In consequence, prices began to rise swiftly.

On October 18, 1941, the Prime Minister announced a much more vigorous economic stabilization policy of which the most important item was a prohibition against the sale of any commodity or service at a price higher than the highest charged by the same seller between September 15 and October 11, 1941. This was part of an integrated program which also involved wage control, export and import controls, heavier taxation, and intensive war loan campaigns.

From its inception, the board refused to listen to arguments on the justice or fairness of a price or on the associated margin of profit unless it was clear that maintenance of the existing price ceiling would result in a serious curtailment of supply.

If such were the case, then four different methods of adjustment were available: (1) to allow the item to go off the market; (2) to introduce simplifications and standardizations to reduce production costs; (3) to pay a subsidy either directly to the producer or indirectly by providing raw materials at a lower price, or (4) to allow a price increase.

The first method was chosen with many luxury lines and with certain imported goods, although there were remarkably few lines which completely disappeared.

Neither of these first two methods could be expected to meet the situation where a major commodity was involved in an impor-

Dutch Indies Blitz Was First Test of War-Polished Arts

By James J. Halsema

Associated Press Correspondent Halsema traveled with Dutch forces in both Java and Sumatra during recent fighting there.

BATAVIA, Java, Oct. 4 (AP).—The lightning Dutch campaign against the Indonesians has been the first use since VJ-Day of the lessons learned by British and American armies in fighting Japan.

The Dutch army in the East Indies is completely new in equipment, tactics and discipline—at least as far up as the staff level. In all three phases it uses leftovers from World War II, involving many improvements not developed in time for extensive combat use.

The German and Japanese invasions at home and in the Indies wiped out the Dutch armies with a rush that showed glaring deficiencies in their prewar structures. What officers managed to escape to Britian and Australia promptly came under the influence of new Allied plans for warfare.

The new armies which Holland organized in 1945 were outfitted chiefly in England and from surplus U. S. Army supplies in Europe and the Far East. From the start, these units were formed with the central idea of creating a mobile, efficient and relatively cheaply operated striking force.

Engineer Vanguard

The Dutch blitz in Java, for instance, was staged primarily by about nine brigades operating under three divisional headquarters located at Soerabaja (east), Semarang (central) and Batavia (west).

Once ashore, Dutch units drove as fast as the comparatively inefficient Indonesian bridge demolitions and the state of the roads permitted. In some areas the rate of march reached 40 kilometers (25 miles) per hour.

Dutch columns are usually spearheaded by tanks and scout cars operating as reconnaissance cavalry, dashing ahead to secure important bridges before they can be blown up. In the event bridges are destroyed, engineers accompanying the column build bypasses with the aid of bulldozers carried on trailers.

In crack units, most infantrymen are skilled bridge builders. There is a shortage of Bailey bridges, and these are employed only when absolutely necessary. Lack of material was largely responsible for the delays which enabled the Indonesians to carry out their demolition of the important east Java city of Malang.

There are at least two completely mechanized brigades, the "V" and the partially American-trained Marine Brigade. These units have a vehicle for each four or five men.

Cheap in Casualties

THIS display of military might in the early stages of the campaign had the effect of scattering all opposition. The initial campaign was extremely cheap in terms of Dutch lives and, although there is reason to believe the official casualty figures minimized losses, the total was indicative of the advantage a modern army has over a home-equipped citizen army.

Since the cease-fire of August 4, however, there have been repeated Indonesian infiltration attempts against thinly held Dutch positions. The Indonesians lost heavily in these attacks, but they did kill and wound a few Dutch.

Dutch officers explain that much of the controversy over the "cease-fire" requested by the United Nations arose from the varying interpretations of maintaining a position.

The Dutch believe in an aggressive, active defense of their perimeters through constant patrolling. This, they say, prevents the establishment of any large hostile force in the vicinity of their lines.

A front is likely to consist of a few dugouts on the outskirts of a village, facing down a road blocked by Indonesian-felled trees. From such an outpost, patrols may stab 6 to 10 miles into areas the republic considers its own. The Dutch say that the static defense employed by the British during their occupation merely invited trouble.

Underground Training

ANYONE who has seen the heel-clicking, neo-Prussian stiffness of a Dutch military headquarters in the East Indies would be astounded at the now familiar sight of a front-line colonel joshing his batman—and getting his jokes back as fast as he made them. Morale in the new army is high.

To a layman, the best troops and officers seem to be the volunteers from Holland, many of whom fought in the underground. Some units transferred intact from fighting the Germans to fighting the Indonesians.

A considerable difference in atmosphere has been caused by the Dutch army's decision to relax its educational requirements for officers. Officers are entitled to batmen, but few except the higher ranking ones have soldiers as servants.

Lieut. Gen. S. H. Speer, the commander in chief, served on MacArthur's staff, as did some of the most influential of his subordinates. Col. J. W. (Johnny) Meyer, field soldier in the Dutch army, is a graduate of the wartime civil affairs school of the University of Virginia in America.

The elite Marine brigade, best-equipped combat unit in the Indies, has an accent of the American South, acquired during training in Virginia and North Carolina. These men have discarded the cavalry horses and bicycle regiments of 1940 in favor of jeeps, air supply and casualty evacuation, walkie-talkies and landing ships. Much of the "V" brigade's gasoline supply was flown to its isolated positions.

Colonel Meyer believes that with five brigades the size of one he now commands (which, with its attached special units, actually amounts to a regimental combat team), the Dutch could have stood off the Japanese invasion of 1942. Overnight, he says, such a force could reach almost any threatened point on the island.

Greek History Mixes Labels

'Bandit' and 'Hero' Are Synonyms

By M. W. Fodor
Post Reporter

This guerilla was a "bandit" to the Greek regulars who captured him in the Macedonian mountains last month, but to some Greeks he's a "hero." The labels have been interchangeable before in Greek history

ATHENS (By Airmail). It is difficult to say where "liberation fight" starts and "brigandage" ends—and vice versa.

A typical news report from Athens papers read:

"On September 10 bandits penetrated into the town of Nigrita. They requisitioned 150 oks of flour, 20 oks of meat, drove away 15 head of cattle and burned down 12 houses."

Day after day such reports appear about "bandits," as the Rightist papers put it, or "Andartes," when less violent nomenclature is used.

Liberation fights and brigandage are so much intermingled in the history of Greece that banditry has become almost a feature of Greek life, especially in war or postwar periods.

Thus, the guerilla war in the north is nothing new to the Greeks; they simply consider it a terrible nuisance, as they would measles.

Even the foreign influence in the Andartes war is by no means novel. Russian imperialism encouraged the Greeks in the Hellenic war of liberation in 1821.

A Hero for Hire

THE LIBERATION heroes of that period were often bandits—"klephts," as they were called. George Kolokotronis was one of the most picturesque. His equestrian statue now adorns the small square in front of the Hotel Splendid in Athens. He was first a klepht and later an Armatole—an armed guard in the pay of Turkey.

The Turks were cynical enough to force such klephts into their own service, entrusting them to police wild mountain districts. (Now the Yugoslavs do the same.) Kolokotronis himself confessed:

"When I was with the Armatoli, I had my pay. When I was a klepht, I had to divide the spoil."

When the period of the klephts came to an end, the "Palikars," who had fought for the liberation of Greece, became the heroes. These Palikars also had been brigands. After the liberation they found themselves without employment and reverted to the only life they knew.

Sir Thomas Wyse, the British Minister to Greece of those days, left a vivid description of these Palikars:

"No one who saw Theodor Grivas can forget the sight. With a wild, audacious countenance, defiant of all around, wearing the handsomest of Greek dresses, covered with gold and embroidery, his great pride was to strut up and down the Patissia road, followed by 10 or 11 savage-looking retainers."

Two and a half generations later, another Colonel Grivas established fame as leader of the Royalist "X"-ists, rivaling both in courage and cruelty the ELAS guerillas whom he fought in the civil war of 1944-1945.

Blackmail Artists

ELLEN S. BOSANQUET, in her book, "The Tale of Athens," wrote that the Minister of Foreign Affairs in the middle of the nineteenth century, a certain Mr. Souzos, had to pay a nice sum to the Palikars to assure the safety of his country house 20 miles north of Athens. George Finlay, the English historian, had to retreat to his town house after repeated blackmail by Palikars and other intruders.

When I visited Macedonia a few days ago I found many farmers working on their plots in the daytime. But at night they retreated to their villages to avoid being robbed, ill-treated or murdered by Andartes. Three generations ago, life in the country was also quite uncertain. Again I am quoting from Miss Bosanquet:

"There was no country life. The peasants who cultivated their land were obliged to return long distances from their farms to sleep in safety in their villages. The only persons who dared to frequent the hills of Attica were shepherds, goatherds, charcoal burners, woodmen or collectors of resin, protected by their poverty and by their dogs from the greatest curse of the period—brigandage."

Sir Thomas Wyse submitted to the Greek government of his day well-authenticated stories of brigand deeds, such as boiling in oil and thumb screws. The government called his report pure "invention." A tragedy in 1870 brought matters to a head. Some English tourists were murdered. This compelled the government to capture and behead the brigands.

Aftermath of 1918

AFTER World War I, brigandage was once more rampant. There was no "liberation fight" then, and it was banditry, pure and simple. Tourists were held for ransom. When Eleutherios Venizelos came to power in 1928, his strong hand ended brigandage.

The Italian and German occupations of Greece brought back old opportunities and customs. Many of the men who fought the occupation forces were indeed heroes, yet they revived the tactics of their ancestors. They levied taxes on villages which they conquered, they killed their Greek opponents as often as they killed Germans, they burned houses and lived on loot.

Russia had exploited the Greek liberation effort in 1821; 123 years later a different Russia succeeded in imposing her influence on the guerillas. She did it for the same reason as did Tsar Alexander I: Greece is in a strategic position on the Mediterranean in general, and toward Constantinople in particular.

The present Liberal Premier, Themistocles Sophoulis, who was for many years a comrade at arms of Venizelos, is now trying to exterminate banditry, both political and nonpolitical. The amnesty he offered serves the purpose of bringing back into civilian life all those who sought refuge in the mountains either for political reasons or because they lacked means of livelihood. Those who continue to obey the command of Slav-paid leaders, he intends to eliminate by force as did Venizelos 20 years ago.

U. S. 'Annexation' Amazes Anzac

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP). A New Zealander, back from a visit to the United States, told a reporter he was amazed that Americans were seriously discussing the possibility of British dominions in the Pacific seeking incorporation in the United States.

R. F. Gambrill, governor-elect of the fifty-second district of Rotary International, said the subject was discussed everywhere "not merely as a remote possibility, but as something regarded as the logical outcome of the war."

"They find it hard to believe that what we in New Zealand, can get out of the British Commonwealth connection can possibly measure up to material benefits of similarly close association with their powerful nation," Gambrill said. "In particular they discuss heavily the intangible links which, at a time when the homeland is faced by a hard struggle, seem to have gained strength."

Foreign Newsmen Swarm Yugoslavia

Among the visitors were journalists from Japan, India, Palestine and Egypt besides those from nearly every European country.

Reconvening Supreme Court Is Heavy With Presidential Timber

By Dillard Stokes
Post Reporter

WITH DOZENS of hot issues coming up—and two or three outside presidential possibilities on the bench—the Supreme Court tomorrow begins its fall term.

Like nearly everybody else, the justices take it for granted that President Truman will run next year. But there is a bare chance he won't. That a strong man would have to be found to take his place, and that somebody is going to be Vice President, are facts of life outside the Supreme Court's marble palace. They are just as much facts inside, behind the long red curtains where the justices will be pulling on their black robes tomorrow morning before taking up the 400 cases that are waiting for them.

These cases have raised some close questions of labor regulation, religious freedom, divorce law and civil rights. Many more such hot potatoes—notably disputes over the Taft-Hartley Act—are sure to be handed the justices among the 1200 other cases that will be filed before next June.

What the court does with these cases will settle the policy of the law, and of the Government, toward the rights of millions of Americans.

Bearing Right

The policy of our new Supreme Court is still in the making, and probably will not be clear-cut for years. But the conservative trend of the 5-to-4 majority has been strongly indicated. In last year's decisions, the court swung to the right in about three cases out of four.

As he begins his second year as the head of the court, Chief Justice Vinson is the leader of the five-man majority. By that token, and by others, he could not be overlooked if the Democrats next year should find themselves casting about for a strong man to succeed President Truman.

Nor could the party leaders pass by Justice Douglas without thought. Or Justice Jackson.

Mr. Vinson left politics when he left the Truman Cabinet to take the seat of Chief Justice Stone. Since then, Mr. Vinson has made no political speeches, and has made practically no speeches of any kind. Nor has he met with party leaders, or been seen at caucuses.

On the contrary, Mr. Vinson buckled down to the wearing job of keeping the Supreme Court abreast of its work. On top of that, the country looked to Mr. Vinson to see that his colleagues did their bickering and name-calling in private. So far he has done both jobs.

Still One Rung

BUT Judge Vinson is no less Fred Vinson, the stout Democratic statesman, who went from Congress to the United States Court of Appeals here, and then served as Economic Stabilizer, War Mobilizer and Secretary of the Treasury. That he has not sought the office of President would not stop the office from seeking him—if the Democrats found themselves hard up for a candidate.

Douglas has been a hard-working justice—he was second to Mr. Vinson on the court's work sheet last term. He was chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission before he went to the court, and can fairly be called a New Dealer. He shows up on the liberal side of the 5-to-4 split, swinging toward the right only on labor cases.

Douglas has been hinted as the presidential dark horse for years, and from time to time whispers go around that he has more than his mind's eye on the White House. As far as the record shows, these whispers could only be based on mind-reading, for the justice has stuck to his job and done no more than Mr. Vinson to make himself a candidate.

But if there should be an open race for the nomination for either President or Vice President, the Democrats would find in Douglas a candidate with the appeal of a Westerner and of a poor boy who worked his way through college.

The Vocal One

FORMER Attorney General Jackson has been the most active of the three in public in the last year. Jackson has spoken widely, but always on legal subjects.

This may have been part of an effort to undo any harm Jackson did himself by his outburst against Justice Black in 1946. His differences with Black, Jackson said then, were so deep as to go to the very reputation of the court for nonpartisan and unbiased decision.

Except for a couple of sour comments in his opinions, Jackson has let the matter drop, but he has remained in the public eye where Democratic leaders could see him as well as anybody else.

As a political possibility, he has a hard head, a crisp and powerful prose style, long political experience and a record on the conservative side of the Supreme Court split.

As long as Mr. Truman is in line for the nomination, none of the three justices would be a contender. But if the President were out of it, each would have his backers.

When Justice Paused

THE COURT has come far, however, from the court of 1800, when there was no quorum on the bench because so many justices were off campaigning against Thomas Jefferson.

On the other hand, there is the precedent of the early justices who left the bench to become Governors, State judges and Senators. And just 35 years ago Justice Hughes—who later became Chief Justice—left the court to run for President.

This may be in the back of some of the heads that line up on the high bench tomorrow, but the 400 cases on the docket are more likely to be in the front of them.

Of these cases, about 75 will be heard during the year. The others may or may not be accepted for hearing. All summer the papers in these cases have been following the justices in big mail bags. All summer they have had briefs and answers to briefs for vacation reading.

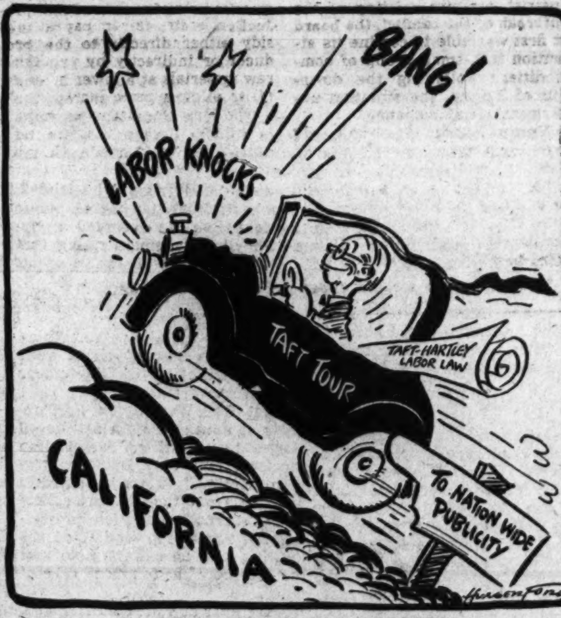
Except Douglas, whose illness may keep him from the bench tomorrow and who may not come back to full-time duty for several weeks. A number of close cases that were due to be heard in October have been put off, on the chance he may not be ready to sit.

The session tomorrow will be a short one. After a few announcements, new members of the Supreme Court bar will be sworn in. Then the court will rise until Monday next week, when the justices will rule on the piled-up cases—probably refusing to hear about 200 of them. After that they will meet every day for two weeks to hear arguments.

Those Stars Keep Glimmering Through

'Ike' Icon at End of Taft Tour

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter



EVERY KNOCK WAS A BOOST
. . . Hungerford, in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

EN ROUTE to Washington.—The two carloads of newsmen who went West with Taft return with one lasting impression.

It wasn't what Taft said or didn't say. It wasn't the controversial program he briefed for his party, the delegates he failed to corral or the pickets who booed and jeered.

It was an impression of waiting—of party leaders on their guard against premature commitments to Taft or any other Republican in the top running.

Some of them may have definite ideas who the nominee won't be. Mostly, they're sure as shooting it won't be Taft. But, barring favorite sons, Western State leaders want plenty of time to look over the field.

Which means the GOP race on the surface looks as wide open today as it was before Taft, and earlier when Thomas Dewey and Harold Stassen cast glances west.

Picket Prominence

WELCOMING committees had kind words and handshakes for the Senator. They even reached a sort of enthusiasm when the pickets made his going rough. But in between speeches they asked about the faces they hadn't seen.

They wanted to know about Eisenhower. They inquired about Vandenberg. Would the East consider Warren for the top, not the second, spot? By every sign and gesture they showed they were waiting for, and half expecting, the arrival at any moment of a dark horse party winner.

Which explains why more than local interest may develop in a little event not even remotely connected with the Taft tour.

On the weekend of October 24-26, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower is returning to Abilene, Kans., where his mother lives. Occasion is the launching of a drive to raise a million dollars for an Eisenhower Memorial to house his war trophies.

Eisenhower isn't definitely billed to talk. If he does, he won't say anything political. But he will be around Abilene and so will a lot of Kansas neighbors.

It will be nonpolitical as all get-out, but presidential booms have started rolling on less.

Setting the Clock

FROM the start of the Taft tour until the end, Eisenhower's name had a way of cropping up in far-away places.

In one far Western State a prominent party leader forecast in a hushed voice that a movement for the general would "sweep the country" if properly timed.

"If it starts now, it'll blow up before convention time," he speculated. "But maybe in another two months. . . .?"

Reporters following Taft needed nothing more tangible than that to touch off another round of Eisenhower stories.

When Taft told his friend, Dr. Wilson Compton, that college presidents would be "wise" to keep out of politics, many jumped to the conclusion that he was hitting at Eisenhower. Taft denied it.

Even when the tour ended in Wyoming's cow country, the general's name was on every tongue. Newsmen foregathered in the Senator's car for a farewell songfest with the Tafts. The Cleveland Plain Dealer's Walker Buel wrote a song for the occasion.

The Tafts joined them in singing:

"Oh, give me a home
Where the delegates roam,
With Republican leaders at play;
Where seldom a word
Of Tom Dewey is heard,
And Eisehower's still far away.
(Refrain)
"Taft, Taft on the range,
Where Republican delegates play;
Where seldom a word
Of Tom Dewey is heard
And Eisenhower's still far away."

But a great deal was heard of Tom Dewey. The man whose silence contrasts so strikingly with Taft's garrulousness on this trip has friends strategically placed in every far Western GOP organization. At the close of the Taft tour as at the start of it, Dewey remained his party's leading undeclared contender, the man to beat.

Stassen's Youngsters

MORE was heard of Minnesota's Harold Stassen than was written. But to probe Stassen's strength, reporters had to dig deeper than the State leadership figures chiefly in evidence on this tour. Except in Oregon, where a preferential primary leaves the choice with the rank and file, Young Republicans carry almost the entire force of the Stassen drive.

When the six-State roundup was complete, and "results" appraised, you couldn't count the score for any man in delegates. What you brought back was that feeling, uppermost in every State, of "waiting, waiting, for the right man to show—a man who can win."

Strange as it seems, it is that feeling of "anybody's race" which may influence Taft, who looks like a nonwinner, if anybody does, to announce his candidacy the latter part of this month.

Stranger still, that decision will be welcomed in many a presidential camp cold to Taft. They want it to continue "anybody's race," until the decision goes to the convention floor. It looks now like only Taft can hold the door open with an initial ballot show against the present titleholder—Governor Dewey.

If Taft quits now, the convention decision in 1948, as in 1944, may go to Dewey by default. which explains that gag line about Taft: "Favorite sons' favorite son."

Save-the-Cow Drive Has Palatial Home

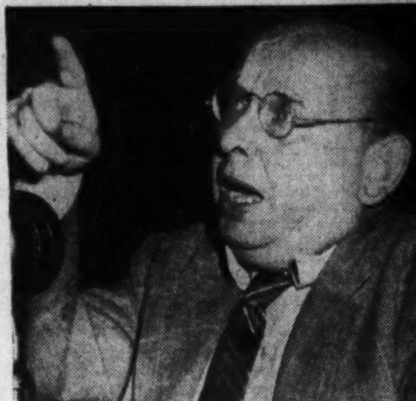
New Delhi, India (AP).—The palatial home of Mahomed Ali Jinnah, Moslem leader, in New Delhi, is to become headquarters for a Hindu crusade to make killings of sacred cows a criminal offense.

Seth Ramkrishnan Dalmia, capitalist-publisher, says he has bought the home from Jinnah for $100,000 and will make it headquarters for his Don't-Kill-Cows campaign which is gathering momentum.

He Called His Music Marxian

Eisler Writings Tint His Tunes

By Adrienne Tassler
Post Reporter



Hollywood Composer Hanns Eisler leads with his right in testimony before the House Un-American Activities Committee

HANNS EISLER'S music—those scores just scrutinized by the House Un-American Activities Committee—is vigorous and provocative. But the German-born composer's works do not necessarily reveal him as an agent of the Kremlin or as a Communist sympathizer.

What finally happened to the scores written by the Hollywoodian, who faces arrest for deportation proceedings, poses other questions, however.

House investigators, who held three days of hearings on Eisler's admission to the United States, are outspoken in their belief that virtually every bar calls on listeners to take up the "class struggle." They claim the lyrics, though not written by Eisler, were written in close collaboration with him.

They point to a passage from "International Literature," published in Moscow in 1933, in which Eisler is quoted as describing certain of his choruses in this way:

"They are a peculiar kind of political seminar on problems of party strategy and tactics . . . It is only a method of pedagogic work with students of Marxian schools and proletarian assemblies."

'Opposite Classes'

RETURNING to the songs, Eisler's stirring "Comintern March," contained in an "International Collection of Revolutionary Songs" published in 1933, implores:

"Arise, fellow-workers,
March firmly and boldly
From mill, mine and quarry,
March shoulder to shoulder
Look well to your weapons,
There's fighting ahead;
Be ready to battle
For freedom and bread!

It concludes:

"With Leninist teachings
Our glorious beacon,
We fight for the Soviets
And never shall weaken
Two opposite classes
Engage in this fight;
Our slogan, in masses,
All workers, unite!"

Another song, "In Praise of Learning," calls on workers to "learn now" for "you must be ready to take over." Stamped on the back of the score examined by House investigators was the notation:

"Hanns Eisler, composer of this song, was exiled from Germany by Hitler for his workers' songs. Copies of this and other Eisler songs may be obtained from the Anti-Nazi Federation in your city."

A magazine, "Soviet Music," published early in 1933, lists "Comrade Eisler" as an organizer of an international music bureau. Its "principal task," the article states, will be to "unite the revolutionary musical forces in all countries, to exchange musical experience . . . to attract into the ranks of the revolutionary musical front the better representatives of the workers' intelligentsia . . ."

A Clarion Penman

EISLER as a writer perhaps reveals himself more to the layman than he does as a composer.

In a signed article appearing in the Modern Music magazine in the spring of 1935 the self-admitted onetime Communist Party member lambases the modern composer as a "parasite . . . supported by private connoisseurs and the benevolence of a few wealthy people."

He implores the composer to "abandon the void" in which he lives "and seek a social standing.

"When he understands that the present social form has produced musical barbarism, then he will seek to change it."

Of the musical content of Eisler's compositions, a critic said of him in 1930:

"Eisler has poured primitive and vigorous feeling into a new choral harmonic scheme. But the music is technically crude and he makes no attempt to improve it . . .

"This material Eisler uses not as an end but only as a means to further his primitive desire to give vent to the feelings by shouting, howling and otherwise making vocal sounds. A vital joy permeates his compositions and carries his audience with it."

Food Export Myth Persists in Reich

HAMBURG, Oct. 4 (AP).—British officials admit being unable to kill what they call "the biggest German lie since Goebbels."

Despite all their efforts through radio, newspapers, posters and exhibitions, an incredible number of Germans firmly believes that food is being exported from hungry Germany to Britain.

Public opinion surveys, carried out month after month by Germans under British supervision, disclose implicit belief that butter, eggs, milk, meat and vegetables are being sent to the United Kingdom.

A recent questioning of 6000 Germans showed that one in eight thought food was being exported from both the British and American zones. The question was not part of the questionnaire. The information was added gratuitously by Germans interrogated.

French Airplanes End Locust Siege

Bordeaux (AP).—Planes spraying fields from 10 feet above the ground were used in fighting a plague of locusts ravishing maize and millet crops in the Gironde region of western France.

A small fleet of planes, lent the agricultural service by the Hourtin military aviation base, killed 90 per cent of locusts in areas where they were used, agricultural authorities reported.

None So Blind

Representative John Taber's casual remarks to the press in Berlin will be very painful to many of his friends. For they indicate that he has made a tour of Europe without opening his eyes to see what has been unmistakably plain to a host of other travelers, to say nothing of the Europeans themselves. He has traveled through at least six countries without seeing any "underfed people." His statement does not in any sense change the stark reality of widespread undernourishment and hunger in Europe. The facts have been established by dozens of studies and buttressed by up-to-date information about the volume of food produced in Europe and imported from elsewhere. Indeed, Mr. Taber has not attempted to dispute these facts. His contention is only that he has not seen the evidence of suffering from lack of food.

Congressman Dirksen, one of Mr. Taber's colleagues on the House Appropriations Committee, tried to save the latter from his blunder by saying that perhaps Mr. Taber meant he had seen no instances of emaciation. Having used his eyes for some weeks in Germany, Mr. Dirksen knows how far wide of the facts his colleague's statement is. But Mr. Taber clung to his original contention. Apparently the crowds that jam railway stations waiting to cling on to overloaded railway cars in the hope of being able to buy a few pounds of potatoes out in the country mean nothing to him. Nor, for that matter, did the general lack of vigor which he admits to having observed. His sharpest complaint is that the people of some European countries are not working as hard as they should, which is an inescapable consequence of hunger. Yet in his next comment he denied having seen any evidence of hunger.

More astute observers than Representative Taber have reported that production in Europe's recovering industries and mines is held down by the meager food allowance to the workers. They know that there is a direct relationship between what a man is fed and what he is able to produce. But Mr. Taber himself has not been obliged to scratch around for food, and apparently he has made no effort to determine just what is available to the workers of Italy, France, Austria, Greece or Germany. All he sees is the desirability of harder work. It is precisely this superficial attitude that is likely to drive underfed people in war-torn lands to despair. What may be even more serious, it is likely to mislead complacent Americans who overestimate Mr. Taber's ability to see what is under his nose.

Recreation Policy

What answer can her fellow members on the District Board of Education give to Mrs. Velma G. Williams who objected on Wednesday to granting the District Recreation Board authority to use school properties for a segregated recreational program? "I don't see," she said, "how children can poison each other by playing on the same playground." It is not easy to see this. It is very easy indeed, however, to see how an enforced separation of children on account of the color of their skins can instill in them the deadly poison of racial antagonism, infecting them on the one hand with a feeling of cruel deprivation and on the other with a venomous sense of racial superiority.

Whatever the legalism by which it is justified, the system of racial segregation practiced by the District Recreation Board in its administration of public school playgrounds is wasteful and tragic. It is wasteful because, as a result, available play facilities are not fully utilized and children are denied the use of facilities convenient to their homes. It is tragic because it perpetuates senselessly—and in respect of the very young among whom it can best be eradicated—an undemocratic pattern which bedevils this community's racial relations. Playgrounds afford an ideal opportunity to extend friendly intercourse between the races. The joint use of Federal playgrounds by whites and Negroes has demonstrated beyond doubt how sanely and happily the two races can play together.

Elsewhere on this page we publish a letter from the vice chairman of the Recreation Board, James E. Schwab, who demands that The Washington Post "acquaint the public with the basis of its judgment," expressed in a recent editorial, that "the Recreation Board has revealed too little understanding of the character of American institutions to be entrusted with plenary power" to define those institutions. The judgment is based, as Mr. Schwab surmises, on the board's insistence upon continuing and extending the policy of racial segregation—and in particular on its insistence upon applying this policy to the use of school buildings for adult discussion meetings. That the board "is composed of persons earnestly trying to do the best possible job" we do not doubt; we intend no disparagement of its motives.

The editorial in no way suggests, as Mr. Schwab seems to suppose, that the Recreation Board had any responsibility for the Dahlgren Terrace citizens' meeting. Indeed, it is precisely because we believe it should not have responsibility of this sort that we deplored Mr. Christiansen's citation of the board's rules governing the use of schools for citizen activities. These rules, even in the hands of a board far wiser and more tolerant, could amount to a licensing power. We do not think that any board should have such power to restrict the utilization of public school buildings for the free discussion of ideas—even, as we said, unpopular ideas, so long as they do not create an actual danger of disorder or criminality.

Trial By Whimsy

Two men, neither of them, perhaps, very important in himself, have just lost civilian jobs with American Military Government in Germany. They lost these jobs because a Republican Congressman from Michigan, George A. Dondero, who fancies himself an authority on radicalism, said that they are either Communists or disloyal to the United States. A loyalty committee which reviewed the charges against these men cleared both of them. But Mr. Dondero had his way, nonetheless. Innocent or guilty, the men are out, and it would seem that Military Government might just as well not have bothered to put them through the ritual of review. For in these matters the scales of justice can too easily be tipped by a Congressman's caprice.

It is not so much the decision of the loyalty committee that the charges were unfounded as the decision of Military Government not to renew their contracts that will prove decisive in the lives of these two men. As long as they live they will have to explain, if they can, why they were not deemed trustworthy enough to continue in their occupation jobs. We hope, therefore, that Mr. Dondero is very sure of his ground, that his judgment has not been swayed by malice or even by prejudice—which may be just as ruinous to its victims—and that he has not confused, as he has sometimes done in the past, mere intellectual deviationism with disloyalty.

Mr. Dondero must search his conscience on yet another score. For if he is unconcerned about what he has done to a couple of obscure individuals, he can scarcely, being an exceedingly loyal fellow himself, remain indifferent to the effect of his action upon the functioning of the United States Government overseas. Former Secretary of War Patterson said something interesting in this connection the other day. He was talking to a group of educators, lawyers and students in New York on the theme, "The Citizens' Participation in Public Affairs," and he expressed skepticism about transferring the tasks of military occupation from the Army to the Department of State because of the difficulty of enlisting capable civilian personnel. And he cited as a specific obstacle the risk "of being the object of unwarranted attack by partisan-minded committees of Congress." Mr. Dondero has not made the Federal service seem very secure or attractive.

Sham In Korea

Shorn of its facade of magnanimity, the Russian proposal to withdraw troops from Korea is a bare-faced attempt to saddle that frustrated country with the police regime that Moscow has been busy fostering in the northern zone. For Russia and the United States to pull out their troops in 1948, as Col. Gen. Terenty Shtikov advocates, would by no means create the free and independent Korea to which we are pledged. Instead it would be a recipe for chaos and probable civil war.

Some of the most vocal advocates of independence, including Dr. Syngman Rhee, have been quick to see the gimmick in the Russian proposal. General Shtikov's offer differs markedly from the suggestion of Undersecretary of State Lovett last month that Russia and the United States agree jointly with a Korean provisional government as to the date of withdrawal after such a government has been established. The current Russian statement says nothing about the set-up to take the place of the military government. The presumption is that Korea would be left as a vacuum, and as such, provide easy picking for the Communist army of North Korea. The only independence that would ensue under such an arrangement would be of the Russian variety, with Korea joining the roster of Soviet satellites.

Aside from its propaganda overtones, the Soviet move appears to be an answer to Secretary of State Marshall's effort to place the Korean problem on the agenda of the U. N. General Assembly. We hope that this will in no way dissuade the State Department from pressing the case, for it is becoming increasingly apparent that recourse to world opinion has been made necessary by the impasse caused by the division of Korea. To be sure, any solution will have to be a compromise much in the same way that the U. N. Commission's proposed Palestine solution is a compromise. But this much is certain: Every day that the artificial division continues, the problem becomes worse. If it is ever to be settled, it must be settled soon.

Meanwhile there is a warning to the United States in the Russian effort to appeal to the Korean people as the champion of their freedom and in Moscow's anti-American radio campaign launched last week with the object of preparing the way for a Communist government in Korea. That is a warning for us to get a move on in completing the establishment of a real civil government in South Korea that can furnish the groundwork for a national government to function when the troops leave. Russia is to blame for the continuing compartmentalization of Korea, but that should not excuse weakness or vacillation on our part in going ahead with a program to turn responsibility over to the Koreans. Our troops must leave sometime, and when they do, the only answer to the threat posed by communization of northern Korea will be a strong popular government in the south.

Three-Dollar Wheat

It is useless to rail against Government purchase of grain as the cause of high wheat prices, which are flirting around the $3 mark in Chicago and Minneapolis. There can be no doubt that heavy Government buying is a large factor in the current all-time highs. But Government buying is inevitable. It is a basic condition that must be accepted if we are not to watch the rest of the world starve. Therefore, we cannot agree with grain exchange officials in their call for a congressional investigation to fix responsibility for wild market fluctuations on the Government. The thing to do, it seems to us, is to go after some of the contributory causes of high prices that are susceptible of change. Overspeculation is one of these. Another is excessive domestic demand.

To be sure, speculation is a result rather than a cause of the boom market that prevails. It is the child of scarcity. Within limits, speculation performs a useful function in our economy. Nor, with an average Government floor of $1.83 under wheat prices, can there be the wild speculation in wheat that has occurred in the past. Nevertheless, it can scarcely be challenged that speculation by persons seeking to make a killing out of the grain shortage has effected the market. Now grain exchanges have moved to increase cash margin requirements 50 per cent to put a halt to excessive speculation. This is but half of the increase requested by Secretary of Agriculture Anderson, and we have some doubts as to its efficacy. But the Government is powerless to command; it can only request cooperation. Now the burden of proof is on the grain exchanges to demonstrate that they have the ability to discipline their members.

Strong efforts are under way to reduce domestic demand for wheat. Aside from the appeal to home consumers, of course, the most effective campaign can be made among heavy industrial users of wheat. The Citizens Food Committee has obtained a valuable agreement from a large part of the distilling industry to eliminate the use of wheat in the manufacture of liquor and to reduce by one-half the use of other grains. It is to be hoped that the entire industry will accept these restraints. The brewers are in a less advantageous position, but it is imperative that they, too, cut down their use of grain. Indeed, the cooperation of all industrial users of wheat as well as home consumers is essential to the success of the voluntary conservation program. When they realize the dent that $3 wheat will make in their own pocketbooks and in the volume of relief that we can supply to foreign nations with the dollars we propose to furnish them, they should be as eager to help as the Government is to have them do so.

What Crime Feeds On

Citizens of the District will be pleased to know that Major Barrett is moving to counteract the appalling increase in crime here. When the FBI recently reported that, among cities of comparable size, the District was first in burglaries, aggravated assault and petty larceny, our new superintendent of police seemed to be skeptical. Now that his own report to the Commissioners shows a 45 per cent increase in serious crime during the fiscal year 1947, as compared with the previous year, he admits that the situation is "far from encouraging." Considering the fact that the police cleared only one half of the felonies committed last year, this reaction is far too complacent to satisfy those thousands of citizens who are being assaulted, defrauded, robbed, or otherwise deprived of their rights and property. But it is noteworthy that Major Barrett is moving to reorganize the Police Department and is calling for a minimum force of 2500 men. His latest move to win the confidence of youngsters attending the Metropolitan Police Boys Clubs is likewise on the constructive side.

We cannot avoid, however, contrasting the slow and uncertain official reaction to a disgraceful situation with what might be expected if Washington had a really responsible government. If Commissioner John Russell Young had been on the job, he would have known months ago that the crime rate here was rising in an alarming fashion and that the police were concealing crime right under his nose. But Mr. Young does not have to answer to the people; in fact, he is responsible to no one at all, except the overworked President, who obviously does not have time to look into law enforcement in the Capital. The people, too, have been apathetic largely because, we suspect, they have no voice in the local government and no feeling of responsibility for what it does and no control over it. The increase in crime is thus nobody's business. Lawlessness is piled upon lawlessness until the situation becomes so shocking that the police are forced, under prodding from the press, to make some show of action.

The whole process would be reversed by an alert government responsible to the governed. Officials would be under the necessity of making a good record in law enforcement to hold their positions. They would watch carefully both crime trends and police efficiency, and they could be expected to act promptly to avoid embarrassment, instead of letting an intolerable situation develop without their knowledge or concern. Coming at this late hour, the report of a 45 per cent increase in felonies is a virtual confession of incompetence in high places, and we think the people will so regard it.

"Cakes and Ale"

In your "Cakes and Ale" editorial of September 30, I found a glaring fallacy that prompts me to call you to heel. It sports a startling inaccuracy that can come only from a narrow-minded or hopelessly ignorant editorial writer.

Anyone even suggesting that Gen. Robert E. Lee loved war is as ignorant of American history as a Russian kulak. Even a cursory study of General Lee would reveal his profound distaste for war and for the job he had before him. Few generals in history had as great a personal grief over loss of life as did this greatest of all American military men..

Suggested reading: the Pulitzer prize-winning biography, Robert E. Lee, by Douglas Southall Freeman, and a good junior high school American history textbook.

EARLE P. BROWN.

Bethesda, Md.

For colossal lack of logic and knowledge even in this age of asininity, the writer of the editorial, "Cakes and Ale," sets a new world record, methinks, when he says of the Confederate Generals Lee, Stuart and Jackson: "There is some reason to believe that all three of these examples were men who did not need any solace from liquor because they were strongly tempted to the love of war for its own sake."

I am sending the editorial to the scholar and Pulitzer prize winner, Douglas Freeman—just in case he may have missed seeing the astounding statement.

VIRGINIAN.

Washington.

Editor's note: In Dr. Freeman's celebrated biography, General Lee is quoted (Vol. II, p. 426) as having observed to General Longstreet after the battle of Fredericksburg: "It is well that war is so terrible—we should grow too fond of it." This passage seems to suggest that it held for him some of the esthetic interest that it has held for so many who were soldiers by vocation. We did not mean to imply that General Lee morally approved of war; it is quite evident from his letters that he did not. In this connection it is interesting to recall Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell's conclusion that General Lee was "too much of a gentleman" to have been one of the really great captains.

U. N. Palestine Plan

The American Zionist Emergency Council requested me, as former editor of the Boston Herald and a member of the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry on Palestine, to send telegrams at their expense to editors of American dailies, personally affirming my support of recommendations made by the majority of the United Nations.

Being heartily in favor of the U. N. S. C. O. P. majority proposals, I consider it a privilege and duty to urge my colleagues of the American press to suport editorially the U. N. S. C. O. P. majority report and to call upon our Government to stand behind these U. N. S. C. O. P. proposals which are just to both Jews and Arabs, which are workable and offer the only sensible solution for an extremely tragic problem.

From a thorough study of the problem made by the Anglo-American committee, I testify that Arab threats are baseless and that our economic interests will in no way be impaired. It is obvious that unless the United States delegation wholeheartedly supports the majority report, the problem will remain unsolved and untold suffering and strife will endlessly continue. Only the American press, speaking for public opinion, can induce our Government to take the strong and honorable stand which is in conformity with our often-repeated commitments indorsing statehood in Palestine.

Your editorial support now will render great service to an historic cause, justice, to the best American interests and to stabilization in the vital Middle East. I sincerely hope you will agree with me and act accordingly.

FRANK W. BUXTON.

Boston.

"Raedy Case"

For many weeks the local papers have been filled with letters and editorials heaping imprecations on a lady. Such an editorial appeared in The Washington Post of September 29. I have been waiting and watching to see some word in the lady's defense, but have been disappointed. All these sinless writers seemed vying with one another to cast stones at the woman. It is time that someone came to her defense. Since no one else does so, I unsheath my pen to say:

Judge Raedy should be lauded. She has rendered a signal public service. She has exploded a popular myth, by demonstrating that all virtue, infallibility and divinity does not rest beneath judicial robes.

JOHN A. SAVAGE.

Paris Fashions

The Traphagen School of Fashion is in complete agreement with you in your protests against the 1948 Paris fashions. We believe that these fashions constitute an unimaginative attempt by French designers to reissue outmoded styles and are far from creative.

Here at the Traphagen School we feel that American designers have surpassed the French in creating costumes completely suitable to the modern scene—particularly in the forward-looking New World. Styles which hamper free action and distort the human figure with padding and needless corseting are as obsolete as the surrey with the fringe on top. Both can be amusing but neither is practical in modern living.

Furthermore, we feel that styles which accent increased use of fabrics are thoughtless. Thoughtless of the millions of people all over the world who sorely need any kind of clothing. Diversion of textiles to sheerly "high style" purposes is wanton extravagance at this time.

ETHEL TRAPHAGEN,

"Creating Unrest"

There is certainly "something ironic and ominous" about your leading editorial of September 27, "Creating Unrest."

First The Washington Post reports at unusual length and detail (for a mere citizens' association meeting) "the ugly Dahlgren terrace meeting." Then it publishes a letter from the Dahlgren Terrace Citizens Association protesting the reporter's version of the meeting with an editor's note that the reporter had made careful notes.

A member of your editorial staff phoned Mr. Christianson, superintendent of recreation, and was given a complete explanation that the only part played by the Recreation Board in the meeting was granting the association its usual annual permit for holding association meetings, as it does citizens' groups all over the District. The writer was told of the rule of the board governing the use of schools for citizen activities, that states:

"Such facilities shall not be used for sectarian purposes, for activities tending to create unrest and acrimonious discussions in the community or for teachings contrary to our American institutions."

He was told that this rule was adopted from, and is identical with, a rule of the Board of Education, under whose authority the Recreation Board issues permits for citizen groups to use school buildings, that the rule has been in effect for years. He was told of the receipt of a letter from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which demands an immediate investigation of the Department of Recreation because it "openly condones the use of these same facilities by groups that masquerade as 'citizens' associations' but which are firmly dedicated to unfriendly and undemocratic principles." He was told the circular letter calling attention to the above set rule was sent only as a reminder to the citizen groups. The letter did not indicate that the board or department had passed judgment on the Dahlgren terrace meeting.

Despite this careful explanation the editorial states, "The doctrine it (the Recreation Board) now advances is a high-handed and extremely dangerous one." Clearly this is an inexcusable misstatement.

The Recreation Board is composed of persons earnestly trying to do the best possible job under extremely difficult circumstances. Newspapers, organizations and individuals can beat their drums and declare their broadmindedness and idealism. Many do, and yet fail to do any of the practical things they might do to advance that idealism. I do not believe any of the noisemakers have greater idealism than does each member of the Recreation Board, but pure idealism solves few, if any, immediate problems. The Recreation Board has to deal with narrow-minded persons on both sides of the question. To date the board has not been influenced from following a course best calculated to make the inadequate recreation facilities produce the best possible results for the greater number.

Your editorial does no credit to your paper. It accuses the board of not preventing the stimulation of racial antagonism, but "rather of preventing any intercourse between the races." The Recreation Board did not initiate the policy of segregation, it inherited it. The board has not extended that policy. The board has not been convinced that under the existing conditions a change of policy would improve the recreation situation.

The editorial states, "The Recreation Board has revealed too little understanding of the character of American institutions." This is stated as a fact whereas it is only the opinion of presumably one editorial writer, and as such disturbs me little. However, if The Washington Post does not repudiate it as the considered opinion of The Washington Post, then The Washington Post should acquaint the public with the basis of its judgment so that judgment can be properly evaluated.

The Recreation Board has received much commendation from The Washington Post in the past on its activities with the exception of the long-established policy of segregation. No board operating in the public interest escapes or can expect to escape criticism at times as to its judgment or actions, but it certainly has the right to expect fair treatment from responsible sources. What good purpose is served by the editorial referred to is hard to discern.

I consider that your paper owes an apology to a citizen group that is doing a job that needs to be done, a job that must be done with the tools at hand. That job is to provide recreation facilities and programs and not to achieve social reformation.

JAMES E. SCHWAB.
Vice Chairman,
D. C. Recreation Board.

Grain Crisis In France

By Andre Visson

Bread And Confidence

THIS WEEK in Washington, M. Georges Bidault, French Foreign Minister and leader of the middle-of-the-road Popular Republicans, laid down before President Truman and high American officials a somber picture of the plight that is facing France this coming winter.

France, whose dollar deficit in 1948 will be second only to that of Great Britain (1.76 billions of dollars for France compared to Great Britain's 2.63 billions), cannot wait for the dollars which will not become available under the Marshall Plan until March at the earliest.

France's dwindling stock of dollars is expected to be exhausted by October 15. If France does not get 150 million dollars immediately, and 120 million dollars monthly thereafter as a stopgap aid, she will be unable to feed her population throughout the winter months.

The French bread ration, which in April was reduced to 250 grams a day and which had to be cut to 200 grams—four rather thin slices—in September, cannot be cut further without provoking riots, which would probably toll the bells for France's present middle-of-the-road coalition government.

The day the French bread ration was reduced to 200 grams, the Paris Communist newspaper, l'Humanite frontpaged this news with the reminder that the German daily bread ration was double—400 grams. And this, according to l'Humanite, was the direct result of American economic and foreign policy. Of course, a lot could be said to refute this assertion of the French Communist Party.

Two main factors are responsible for this bread shortage in a nation whose people were once known as the greatest bread-eaters in Europe: an exceptionally poor harvest, and a not-too-wise bread policy of the French government which, by establishing too low prices for wheat, induced the French farmers to use a considerable amount of grain for feeding their livestock, which sold at much higher prices. But it is more than probable that the Communist argument will impress a great number of Frenchmen who are going to vote this month in municipal elections.

EARLY THIS summer, when this writer was in France, most of the French and foreign political observers agreed that the Communists were likely to lose 10 to 15 per cent of the 5,500,000 votes the won last year. But latest reports from France indicate that in view of the rapidly deteriorating economic conditions, the Communists may now maintain their last year's strength—or even increase it. Should they come out stronger this October, they would naturally insist on reentering the French cabinet which they had to quit last May.

The Popular Republicans, headed by Georges Bidault, Henry Teitgen and Maurice Shumann, and even the right-wing Socialists, headed by President Vincent Auriol and Leon Blum, are no more enthusiastic than the Radical Socialists about readmitting the Communists in the French government. Just as they lost last year's faith in the possibiltiy of cooperation with Moscow on an international level, they do not believe any more in the possibility of cooperation with the Moscow-sponsored French Communists on the national level.

The French government is therefore more than anxious not only to find an immediate, even if temporary, solution for the present acute crisis, but to find it without having to accept any help from Soviet Russia. Any Soviet gesture in that direction would be, indeed, at once capitalized upon by the French Communists in the coming October municipal elections.

BUT WHEN bread grain production has fallen from the prewar 8,900,000 tons to an estimated 3,800,000 tons, and when it is impossible to reduce further the meager ration of a bread—which is a very poor mixture of corn and wheat—the French have to look for cereal imports wherever they find them. M. Tanguy-Prigent, French Minister of Agriculture, indicated this week that in the second term of 1947 France intends to import at least 600,000 tons from the United States, 6000 tons from Canada, and about 214,000 from "other countries."

Those "other countries" can be either Russia or Argentina. But as the Argentinian wheat is sold by the Argentine government at practically prohibitive prices, the French have found themselves compelled to ask for the Soviet grain. And the Soviets can easily provide the hungry French with the needed grain, since only a week ago they offered 350,000 tons of wheat to Belgium, which is also looking for cereal imports.

The French government, which is only too well aware of the seriousness of the situation, does not want either to exaggerate or belittle the Communist danger threatening France in case of continued bread shortage. The Communists, moreover, are not the only ones to threaten the existence of the Vincent Auriol-Paul Ramadier regime. M. De Gaulle, who became, perhaps against his will, the leader of rightist elements in France, is equally criticizing the present French regime with an increasing bitterness for its incapacity to solve the anguishing bread problem. M. De Gaulle recalled that since the days of the siege of Paris in the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71, the French have never been reduced to such a low bread ration as the one which they have to suffer now.

The precarious political stability of France is threatened both from the left and from the right. The people of France are most reluctant to run into any kind of political adventure. They shudder at the prospect of civil war. But they can hardly have any confidence in a government which would prove unable to provide them with their daily bread.

Matter of Fact

Insult Laid to Stalin Pressure

By Stewart Alsop

IT IS dismaying to learn what lay behind the sudden outcrop of violent insults against American leaders in the Soviet Literary Gazette, which brought forth a formal protest from Ambassador Walter Bedell Smith. For, according to reports from Moscow, there is solid evidence that the abuse was inspired by no less a person than Soviet Premier Josef Stalin.

The Literary Gazette is the organ of the Union of Soviet Writers, which for some months has been undergoing an extensive purge. The literary men, already cowed by the purge, were recently informed that Stalin was displeased with the quality of the magazine. They were given to understand that this ominous displeasure would only be softened if the magazine in future had a far more "political and anti-Western content."

The Soviet writers hastened to comply. In their next issue the President of the United States was said to "vie for the laurels of the little corporal of Munich." Secretary of State Marshall was described as "the Shylock of Wall Street." General Eisenhower was said to "speak with the voice of Hitler." And so on.

Pattern Is Fateful

AMBASSADOR SMITH'S protest was, of course, fruitless, and the incident is now no doubt closed. Yet Stalin's reported part in it is interesting as a symptom, and as part of a larger pattern. For it is quite evident, not only from this incident but from the whole course of recent Soviet policy, that Stalin has made a fateful decision.

At one time Stalin, unlike most of those around him, undoubtedly considered the possibility of limited cooperation with the West, at least for tactical purposes. That time is past. The Soviet Union is now waging tireless political warfare against the West and above all against the United States. Reflecting this decision, the world Communist parties may no longer cooperate, however tentatively, with the democratic parties. They must prepare for the revolutionary moment.

The little group of Russian experts in Moscow and Washington first sensed this decisive shift in both the Soviet and Communist lines as early as last April. In that month a series of articles began to appear in Moscow's Pravda.

The series consisted largely of a reprinting of Nicolai Lenin's "April theses," accompanied by a significant interpretation by Pravda's editors. The theses were written in April, 1917. The short-lived Kerensky regime was then in power, and for the first time the Russian Communist Party was a legal political party. A number of the lesser party leaders were therefore proposing that there was no longer need for the traditional tactics of conspiracy and violence. Rather, they argued, the party must concentrate on winning the broad support of the masses, and thus by legal means gain control of the parliament and the government. In his April theses, Lenin blasted these weaklings.

'In Every Country'

THE BOURGEOISIE and their social democratic tools, he said, could never be overthrown except by violence. The social democratic government must be undermined to prepare the way for the revolutionary moment and the seizure of full power by the Communists. Moreover, these tactics did not concern Russia alone.

"There is one and only one kind of internationalism in deed; working wholeheartedly for the development of the revolutionary movement and the revolutionary struggle and supporting such and only such a struggle and such a line in every country without exception." So wrote Lenin in 1917, as reprinted by Pravda in 1947.

Pravda noted carefully that Lenin's 1917 words were fully "applicable to the world situation" of 1947. It remarked also on the "anarchy and deepening crisis of Western capitalism." And it pointed out that by following Lenin's tactics in 1917 the party became sufficiently powerful by November to organize the revolution and seize power.

The Russian experts believe that the Pravda series foreshadowed the increasingly aggressive policy of the Kremlin. It also foreshadowed the fate of such anti-Communist "social democrats" in eastern Europe as Maniu, Nagy and Petkov. Finally, it foreshadowed the new Communist line in the non-Soviet world, especially in Italy and France.

In Italy, Communist Leader Palmiro Togliatti, who once, like the objects of Lenin's wrath in 1917, preached "legality," has now told his followers to be prepared to fight. In France last month, the central committee of the Communist Party decided that its ideology must be reoriented along revolutionary lines, and that French Communists "should resolve to welcome the epithet Stalinist."

Thus the pattern unfolds. The great Communist bid for power in Western Europe will come this winter. As to whether or not it succeeds, more depends on the United States than on Stalin and his fellow strategists in the Kremlin.

Wallace's Warning Is Whispered

HENRY A. WALLACE does two things among many, many others in his busy speechmaking throughout the country. He is by far the most itinerant and most vocal of our political personages. His journeyings from coast to coast (with one to Europe during the summer) parallel the prodigious barnstorming of William Jennings Bryan.

In addition to his voluminous vocalizing, Mr. Wallace, in the 14 years since he came into the public eye through President Roosevelt's appointment of him as Secretary of Agriculture, has written books and magazine articles to a number comparable with the output of professional writers who do not have such distracting avocations as administering a Cabinet post or heading a political faction.

One thing that stands out in Wallace's speeches is his appeal to his following to organize for political action in the primaries and election next year. At least Wallace did this in his speech last month in Philadelphia; it was one of several within a week. To the Philadelphia meeting (it was sponsored by the Progressive Citizens of America) Wallace said: "Demonstrate that you can build a political organization . . . the next time I come to Philadelphia I shall hope to address you all as precinct captains and workers representing the 52 wards and 1352 precincts of this great city."

Cushioned Threat

WHAT use is Wallace or his sponsoring PCA going to make of this organization of political workers? The answer to this is the other important aspect of Wallace's prodigious activity. The answer should be found in his speeches, and it is, in a way, if you search carefully enough through the vast number of Wallace's utterances.

In his Madison Square Garden speech last month Wallace said: "Unless I am definitely and positively proved wrong, I shall work within the Democratic Party." That he will work within the Democratic Party is repeatedly affirmed by Mr. Wallace, though in cases this writer has observed the affirmation is accomplished by a qualification, such as the "unless" in the sentence just quoted or followed by an equivalent of "but."

One may surmise that Wallace is addressing not merely his audiences but President Truman and other heads of the Democratic Party and is saying to them what amounts to "Let me and my following have a place in the Democratic Party—or else." One can imagine Wallace as a wandering bard singing a little song to Mr. Truman, changing the name in a popular ditty and singing: "Open the door, Harry."

No Empty Bluff

MR. TRUMAN is supposed to have slammed the door pretty firmly when he evicted Wallace from his Cabinet a little over a year ago. Nevertheless, Wallace's message and the "or else" implied in it have a meaning Mr. Truman cannot comfortably ignore. For the implied "or else" is that Mr. Wallace and his following, if they are kept out of the Democratic Party or cannot by their own efforts achieve a place in it, would start a third party.

The probability, inherent in the circumstances, is that Wallace and his following will, as Wallace put it, "work within the Democratic Party." Even if their effort within the party should be welcomed, or at least not discountenanced, by President Truman and the other organization leaders, would the ultimate outcome give much satisfaction to Wallace and his following?

Wallace's sponsorship and following is largely parallel with the school of thought which, in the congressional elections last year, undertook to elect a Congress sympathetic to it. There is no reason to suppose that this school of thought is stronger now than when its effort in the congressional elections was unsuccessful.

British Pattern

AS TO setting up a third party, there is a simple and sincere conviction on the part of some who advocate it. These want a third party, not for any effect it might have in the presidential election next year. They want a third party as a permanent factor in American politics; they visualize an American equivalent of the Labor Party in Britain.

They contemplate that the new party they visualize would probably have to experience as long a period of growth, accompanied by many defeats, before reaching the status of a major party, as did the Labor Party in England.

Persons having much the same political ideas as advocates of a third party, but more in a hurry, feel that the notion of a permanent and major new party in America is a vain thing. This view is sustained by facts and by precedent. The two-party system, with the present two parties that compose it, is so deeply embedded in the mechanism of American politics that the displacing of one of them is almost literally impossible.

Labor's Local Reins

DRAMATIC developments in the application of the Taft-Hartley Act divert attention from the steady march of State legislation defining and limiting the activities of unions. Since the late thirties, State governments have been dealing with the behavior of organized labor, and in recent years they have been giving this subject more and more of their attention.

In its September Labor Information Bulletin, the Labor Department summarizes the advance of State regulatory legislation in 1947. It says that laws restricting or regulating union activity were enacted in 30 States. Most of the 45 State Legislatures which met during the year considered "restrictive" measures.

The report goes on to say that "since five States, in addition to these 30, have placed restrictions on unions during the past 10 years, this leaves only 12 or 13 States which have not passed this kind of legislation. Such legislation was enacted this year in industrial States where unions are strong and well organized as well as in agricultural or non-industrial States."

Emphasis on Picketing

THE purposes and content of these laws are what one familiar with the labor scene in the last decade would expect. They aim to regulate the excesses of organized labor, to bring certain simple types of behavior under the law, and to protect individuals, employes and employers, and the public from the abuses practiced by organized groups.

These were the purposes of the earliest of the State measures, such as the Wisconsin Employment Relations Act, which not long after the passage of the Wagner Act undertook to define and curb the unfair labor practices of unions.

Many of the new statutes, therefore, are concerned with picketing. A number of States permit picketing only if a strike has been sanctioned by a majority of employes. The Connecticut act prohibits the picketing of homes or residences and mass picketing is outlawed in five States, including Michigan and Texas. An increasing number of laws appear on the statute books limiting both strikes and picketing in public utilities.

California a Sufferer

THE secondary boycott is the subject of attention by many State Legislatures. It is now prohibited under the laws of 11 States, including California, Minnesota, Missouri, Pennsylvania and Texas.

The jurisdictional strike is similarly being brought under some form of public control. The California law, adopted in a State which has witnessed violent encounters between members and officers of rival unions, declares the jurisdictional strike to be against public policy and outlaws it. The Massachusetts and Michigan laws establish procedures for settling jurisdictional disputes.

Strikes by public employes, and the threat that such strikes would become customary, brought on laws prohibiting or limiting strikes by employes of government. In six States—Michigan, Missouri, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Texas—public employes have lost the right to strike.

There is no reason to believe that this trend in local legislation is at an end. It was a response to conditions and experience throughout the country and is likely to continue until the behavior against which it was directed takes a turn for the better.

Real Fount of Youth

By Alton L. Blakeslee

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 4 (AP).—Some strange "fountains of youth" discovered here give promise of explaining some mysteries of aging and of cancer.

A brief dip in one of these fountains boosts the life span of some tiny water animals more than 50 per cent. The findings of Dr. Albert I. Lansing and coworkers of Washington University Medical School indicate that calcium plays a vital role both in growing old and in the growth of cancers.

Dr. Lansing is working with rotifers, little animals with "oars." One thousand of them would form a row only an inch long. They usually live 21 days, have tiny brains, hearts and ovaries, and are perfectly suited for studies of growth and aging.

Rotifers put in water containing very little calcium lived 50 per cent longer, he found. Even in water with normal amounts of calcium, their life-span could be increased more than 50 per cent by diping them for a minute in a bath of sodium citrate. This chemical disolved much of the calcium on their body cells.

Youth Is Passed On

DR. LANSING also found a kind of inherited fountain of youth. He took the eggs, or young, from rotifers only five days old, when they still were adolescents. In the next generation, the young again were taken from five-day-old parents. Within a few generations he had rotifers that lived 36 days, and the life-span apparently can be boosted even higher, he said. This "young line" inherited some capacity to delay aging.

But when, using the same beginning stock, the eggs were taken from senile, 17-day-old rotifers, and when this process was continued, the life-span dropped in each generation and within four generations the line died out.

The same thing happened, but took longer, using animals at any age down to eight days as parents. At eight days they were only young adults, but the growth process had stopped.

This tendency to speed up aging could be reversed, Dr. Lansing said, by again concentrating on young growing parents in any line of short-lived rotifers. The new line would climb back to above the normal span of 21 days.

Matter of Adhesion

THE research indicated that aging starts abruptly, and is closely tied in with the stoppage of growth, Dr. Lansing said. The work on calcium showed that the amount of calcium on the surface of the body cells increases with age, and that the greatest changes in the calcium comes when growth stops.

It may be, he continued, that some chemical in the cell is a growth regulator, that it changes in its ability to make calcium stick to the cell.

In cancer studies, he said, it was found that there is less calcium in cancer cells, and apparently less ability to take up calcium. This decreased ability could start the cells on the uncontrolled growth that cancer represents.

THE Nutrition Foundation, New York, reports that infants need about five times more tryptophane in their food than do adults. Tryptophane is an acid that comes from protein foods. This finding was credited to Dr. Anthony Albanese of Bellevue Hospital.

The foundation also reported that folic acid, the B vitamin now used to cure pernicious anemia, does not cure the nerve disorders that result from the disease. Liver, the older treatment for anemia, cures both the physical and the nerve disorders. These results were credited to the University of Cincinnati.

The enamel of human teeth has three fourths of the hardness of a diamond. It is just under the hardness of quartz and about equal to the hardness of steel in a pocketknife blade. Enamel is the hardest substance in the human body. It is made 98 per cent of minerals. These estimates were made by Dr. Samuel W. Chase, Western Reserve University, Cleveland, as part of a proposal that a good way to attack tooth decay would be first to learn more about enamel.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Truman Assays His Predecessors

By Drew Pearson

WHEN film actor Edward Arnold was in Washington recently, he called at the White House with Carter Barron of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to present President Truman a leather-bound album of American Presidents' portraits.

Thumbing through the 32 portraits, Mr. Truman kept his guests entertained with biographical comments about his predecessors.

"This particular likeness of Tyler," he said of the tenth President, "is reputed to be the greatest work of art of all the presidential portraits. You know, I haven't told this to many people, but I am supposed to be distantly related to the old fellow on my mother's side."

Truman's eyes gleamed when he came to the portrait of Andrew Jackson.

"There was a man for you!" he exclaimed. "A real fighter for the rights of the people. He also knew how to take care of himself. He didn't need a bodyguard. When he was once attacked by a would-be assassin with a knife as he left the Treasury Department, Jackson took the knife away from the man and was about to give him a good going-over with his fists when he was pulled off."

Arnold, now doing a series of radio sketches of our Presidents for the American Broadcasting Co., finally commented:

"My goodness, Mr. President, maybe we should get the ABC research staff down here to confer with you before proceeding with my program."

Marshall's Arab Guests

TOP Zionist leaders have found General Marshall cold and noncommittal toward the United Nations settlement of Palestine. Apparently the Arabs made headway when Marshall entertained them at his secret dinner at Fort Totten, New York. Marshall took the white-robed camel drivers out to his old military post to avoid the newspapers.

The United States Army is preparing a super-super secret military mission to Arabia. The troops are elaborately screened, all men must be highly trained specialists sworn to great secrecy, must take training in secret codes, reconnaissance and demolition work. Nobody will say what the mission is supposed to do.

Marine Corps Overtime

DURING the war there were fewer complaints about caste-system abuses in the Marine Corps than in any other branch of our fighting forces—with the possible exception of the Infantry's paratroopers.

Now that we are back on the peacetime "brass" standard, however, the Marine Corps seems to have deserted its famed standard for democratic treatment of enlisted men. One sore spot is the Naval Gun Factory in Washington, where Col. Harold E. Rosecrans, commander of the Marine Barracks, has been working some of his enlisted personnel from 8 a. m. to 10 p. m.

These long hours (they don't pay for overtime in the armed services) started when Rosecrans was instructed by the Marine Inspector General's Office to install a new accounting system at the gun factory. Rosecrans wasn't told, however, to expedite the job to the extent of working Marines 14 hours a day, six days a week.

Bullheaded Congressman Harold Knutson of Minnesota finally persuaded his Ways and Means Committee to vote $25,000 to pay the expenses of a Wall Street-dominated committee of tax advisers. But when the Wall Streeters submitted their tax recommendations, Knutson refused to let another committee member see the results.

Rating the Orators

MOST accomplished speaker in the Senate, in the opinion of those ear-conditioned experts—the official reporters—is Joseph W. O'Mahoney, the Wyoming plainsman with the broad-A accent of Massachusetts, where he was born 62 years ago.

"Joe O'Mahoney gets our vote beause he is the easiest Senator to follow in debate," says James W. Murphy, chief of the Senate's official reporters.

Murphy should be an authority. His family has been recording congressional debate for nearly a century. His father broke in as an official reporter in 1860 and his uncle, B. F. Murphy, in 1848. Murphy himself has been on the job since 1896.

Close behind Democratic O'Mahoney, Murphy rates Republican Arthur W. Vandenberg, "probably the most persusave orator when rising to an occasion."

"Greatest orator in my experience on the Hill was Senator John W. Daniel of Virginia," Murphy recalls. "Oratory is becoming a lost art, but Senator Vandenberg is the best of the current crop when he wants to let go."

Others high on Murphy's list are Democrats Alben Barkley of Kentucky, Claude Pepper of Florida and Republican Eugene Millikin of Colorado. For ad lib, rough-and-tumble orators he likes Republican Styles Bridges of New Hampshire and Democrat Tom Connally of Texas.

Toughest to follow in debate is New Hampshire's rapid-fire Charles W. Tobey, though Tobey has plenty of competition from such whisperers as Democrats Elbert Thomas of Utah and William Fulbright, the Arkansas Rhodes scholar, Republicans Arthur Capper of Kansas and Douglas Buck of Delaware. An official scribe has to sit almost on top of these Senators to get what they say.

Tobey talks out loud—but too fast for the toiling shorthand reporters, who eschew pencils, use fountain pens exclusively.

Note—Pencils never have been popular with Senate official reporters. They break easily, smudge shorthand characters when the point is worn. Before the invention of fountain pens, old timers used to dip pens in small inkwells fastened to their thumbs or notebooks.

Fine Wool Gabardine Topcoats

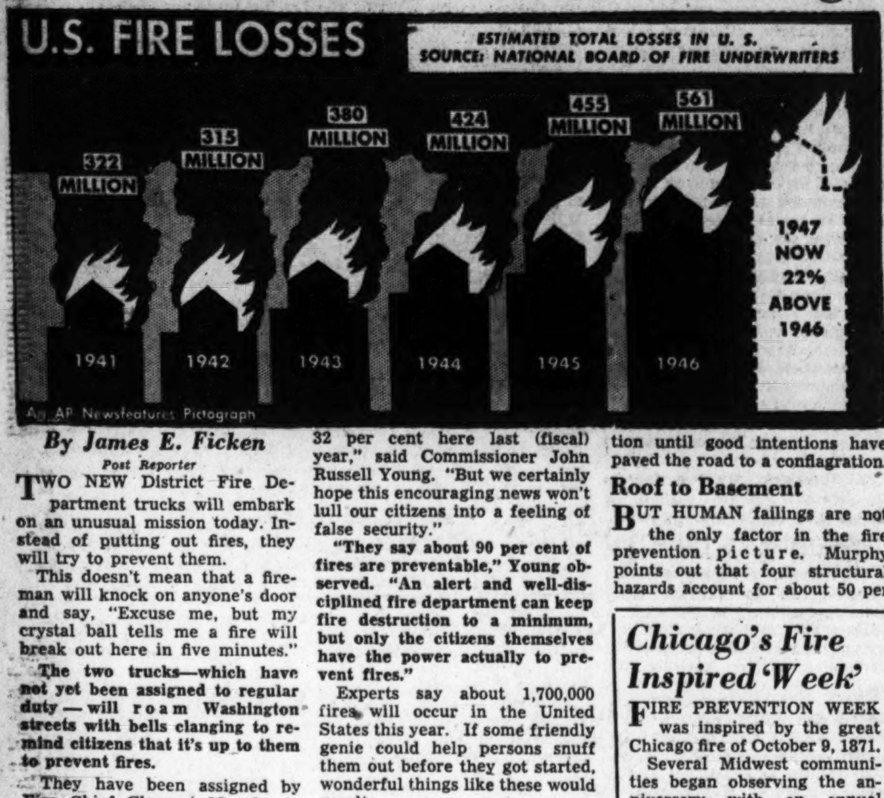
Do You Smoke Cigarettes in Bed?

People Are Worse Than Firebugs



An AP Newsfeatures Pictograph

By James E. Ficken
Post Reporter

TWO NEW District Fire Department trucks will embark on an unusual mission today. Instead of putting out fires, they will try to prevent them.

This doesn't mean that a fireman will knock on anyone's door and say, "Excuse me, but my crystal ball tells me a fire will break out here in five minutes."

The two trucks—which have not yet been assigned to regular duty—will roam Washington streets with bells clanging to remind citizens that it's up to them to prevent fires.

They have been assigned by Fire Chief Clement Murphy to help the city observe Fire Prevention Week which begins today.

Each day the trucks will carry a different banner illustrating a careless personal habit which is a fire hazard.

Burns Kill 2000 Tots, Polio 250

FIRE kills more children than polio.

The National Board of Fire Underwriters reports that more than 2000 children under the age of 5 die each year as a result of burns and scalds received in home accidents. Infantile paralysis claims approximately 250 children under 5 each year.

The board makes the following suggestions to parents:

1. Never leave children unattended in the home. See that sitters are responsible and old enough to give proper care.
2. Be sure that sitters know how to call the fire department.
3. Keep matches, hot liquids, lighted candles and lamps out of reach of children.
4. Keep children from playing with bonfires or fireworks. Fires for marshmallow and popcorn roasts should be held in fireplaces only and with adult supervision.
5. Avoid dressing children in highly flammable clothing, such as fluffy net dresses, brushed cotton or brushed rayon suits.
6. In case of fire in the home get children out of the house first, then call the fire department.

Other items on the fire prevention publicity program, prepared by the Board of Trade and the Fire Department, include:

Radio programs featuring fire safety talks by Fire Department and Board of Trade representatives and other officials.

Down 32 Per Cent

THE program here is part of a Nation-wide campaign proclaimed by President Truman. His plea for vigilance was echoed by the District Commissioners.

"We're certainly proud of the splendid record our Fire Department made in reducing fire loss 32 per cent here last (fiscal) year," said Commissioner John Russell Young. "But we certainly hope this encouraging news won't lull our citizens into a feeling of false security."

"They say about 90 per cent of fires are preventable," Young observed. "An alert and well-disciplined fire department can keep fire destruction to a minimum, but only the citizens themselves have the power actually to prevent fires."

Experts say about 1,700,000 fires will occur in the United States this year. If some friendly genie could help persons snuff them out before they got started, wonderful things like these would result:

Enough money would be saved to give a $5 bill to every man, woman and child in the Nation.

Lives of 11,000 persons would be saved.

Workers in otherwise burned-out shops would put in enough time to build a million automobiles.

Annual Proof

THESE "miracles," of course, are a statistician's dream. But a little extra care on the part of individuals would bring a noticeable improvement, Fire Chief Murphy points out.

"Unlike firefighting," he says, "fire prevention is not a complicated science. There are few fires which cannot be prevented by the application of commonsense."

Proof of this statement, Murphy points out, is the decrease in the number and severity of fires each year during and immediately following Fire Prevention Week. But, as the week's emphasis grows hazy, the curve on the fire loss chart shoots back up.

Practically everybody feels that the other fellow—not himself—needs to be lectured about fire safety. But Murphy believes that almost any honest person will find himself somewhere in the five following categories of "careless characters" whose bad habits breed fire.

1. The smoker who likes to puff a goodnight cigarette in bed. (This practice added up to more than 100,000 fires last year.)

2. The housekeeper who never quite gets around to clearing papers, magazines, rags, discarded furniture and other treasured items from attics, closets and basements.

3. The amateur dry cleaner who insists on using explosive cleaning fluids. (These spot removers caused 21,000 fires last year.)

4. The careless match user. (More than 26,000 fires were caused last year because children were able to reach matches and use them for playthings.)

5. The optimist who always figures he can use a slightly defective piece of electrical equipment once more without getting hurt.

Procrastination goes hand-in-hand with carelessness as a cause of fire, Murphy maintains. Many persons who are aware of fire hazards postpone corrective action until good intentions have paved the road to a conflagration.

Roof to Basement

BUT HUMAN failings are not the only factor in the fire prevention picture. Murphy points out that four structural hazards account for about 50 per cent of all home fires. Persons building, buying or remodeling homes should:

Chicago's Fire Inspired 'Week'

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK was inspired by the great Chicago fire of October 9, 1871.

Several Midwest communities began observing the anniversary with an annual cleanup day. In 1911, at the suggestion of the Fire Marshals Association of North America, Governors of 22 States proclaimed the fortieth anniversary of the Chicago holocaust as the first Fire Prevention Day.

President Wilson made it a Nation-wide observance by proclamation in 1920. Two years later President Harding changed the "day" to "week."

Since then Presidents have issued Fire Prevention Week proclamations annually.

Make sure the roof is made of fire-resistant materials.

See that the heating plant is installed properly with adequate safeguards, such as fire-resistant walls and covers for joists above the furnace.

Insist upon safe chimney construction, making certain woodwork isn't in contact with the chimney. (Heating plants and chimneys should be cleaned at least once a year.)

Plan a wiring system with enough capacity to take care of future needs. Extra outlets in the right places may eliminate the need for long extension cords later on.

Chief Murphy admits that a "fountain of figures" will never put out a fire, but he gives added emphasis to his plea for greater individual carefulness by quoting these statistics, released by the National Fire Protection Association and the National Board of Fire Underwriters:

A fire breaks out in the United States every 20 seconds.

Every day fires occur in 760 homes, 140 stores, six churches, six schools and three hospitals.

Nearly 200,000 automobile fires occur each year.

Nearly 40,000 persons will be killed or injured in fires in 1947, a figure which exceeds the total number listed as missing by the Army and Navy in four years of war.

The expected fire death toll of 11,000 will be nearly 30 times larger than the number of Americans killed in the invasion of Africa.

Property loss due to fires will probably reach an all-time high of $700,000,000—an increase of 25 per cent over last year and 300 per cent over 10 years ago.

Bethesda Scientists Use Fluorine

10-Year Experiment Seeks Texas 'Secret' Of Cavity-Free Teeth

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

SCIENTISTS at the Public Health Center at Bethesda, Md., are trying to find out whether there is any way to stop tooth decay.

From experiments conducted within the past 20 years, they have reason to believe there is such a thing as preventing dental caries (or cavities) in children if the youngsters receive fluorine in their drinking water while their teeth are in the formative stage—before they are 8 years old.

The doctors are now experimenting to determine whether by topical application (application of a fluorine compound direct to the teeth), both children and adults can have better teeth, with fewer caries.

But, as is the case with so much of scientific research, the experimenters don't know how far they've gone or when they'll know the answers to their problems.

Texas Phenomenon

THE present series of experiments began in 1931 when when public health officials tried to discover why children in some sections of the country, notably in west Texas, had mottled enamel on their teeth.

They were able to trace the discoloration to an abundance of fluorine in the public water supply of the area. But while the teeth were unsightly, the scientists found them almost entirely free of caries.

They then attempted to establish the amount of fluorine which could be allowed in the water without disfiguring the teeth. The effective point was set at one part fluorine to a million parts of water.

Controlled experiments were made in a number of cities where there was varying fluorine content in the public water supply, or where fluorine was injected in the one to one million ratio. These cities were Grand Rapids, Mich., Newburgh, N. Y., Brantford, Ontario, Midland, Mich., Sheboyan, Wis., Marshall, Tex., Ottawa, Kans., and Evanston, Ill.

Need Ten Years

RESULTS cannot yet be determined. The experiments have been going on for two years and longer, but the scientists want a 10-year record for these comparable cities before they draw final conclusions. Ten years is enough time for a tooth to erupt in a child's jaw, reach maturity and be exposed to caries.

Preventing caries might give us future generations with very sound teeth—if everyone used a public water supply. But 35 per cent of the Nation's population, in rural areas, uses individual water sources.

That's where topical application comes in. Scientists have found that only 5 per cent of the population has teeth which wouldn't develop caries anyhow.. From tests so far, it would appear that the children's part of the population which uses a public water supply can avoid 60 per cent of its dental caries through use of fluorine.

It would also appear that in children, dental caries can be reduced about 40 per cent by topical application. Topical application tests on adults have not been conclusive.

One group of children who were tested were given four topical applications of fluorine, which scientists believe gives them immunity from caries for a minimum of three years.

Danger of Toxicity

AS by-products of the use of fluorine, scientists so far have been unsuccessful in developing toothpaste or mouthwash with fluoride ingredients. Principal drawback is that even a 2 per cent solution of sodium fluoride has a toxic effect.

There are fluoride and bone-meal tablets which can be dispensed by prescription to increase the fluorine content of the diet. These tablets have attained wide usage, although scientists, because of lack of controlled experiments, do not know how effective they are.

For scientists do not yet know what causes dental caries. They believe they are caused by the decalcification of a tooth by an acid substance which, in scientific language, is the result of a bacterial metabolism.

The acid is caused, it is believed, when sugar comes into contact with the acid-producing bacteria. One of the mysteries in the study of caries is whether lactobacillus acidophilus does cause caries. Scientists do not yet know the effect of fluorine on these bacteria. They know that such bacteria do not grow where there is natural fluorine in the water supply. Even though the boys and girls in those areas eat candy by the pail, no acid bacteria occur.

Some of the public health scientists who are trying to answer all these questions are Dr. H. Trendley Dean, chief dental director, dental research section; deputy chief, Francis A. Arnold, jr.; dental surgeon, John W. Knutson; senior biochemist, Frank J. McClure; dental surgeon, Robert M. Stephan; senior assistant dental surgeon, David B. Scott; associate biochemist, Isadore Zipkin; senior assistant dental surgeon, H. Berton McCauley; assistant dental surgeon, Robert C. Likins, and research associate, Edward G. Hampp.

Newspapering in Old Chicago

'Interesting People' Covers Casey

BEN HECHT told a story the other evening about Carl Sandburg, dean of American poets and biographer of Lincoln.

One of Carl's early assignments on the Chicago Daily News was an out-of-town political convention. Four days on the scene and no word from the dreamy poet-reporter. A delegate was shot by another delegate. Still no story from Carl. Furious with his new reporter, the city editor wired, "Come home immediately." As Hecht tells it, Carl wired in reply, "Can't come now. Everything too exciting."

Hecht, Billy Rose, Louis Sobol and Russell Maloney and I were discussing Louis' new book "Some Days Were Happy." We came to the conclusion that there is no group so likely to become lacrymose in their lager as the boys who used to be newspapermen themselves.

Best raconteur of the old Chicago Daily News gang (which includes John Gunther, Hecht, Sandburg, Lloyd Lewis and some 20 of the top foreign correspondents) is Bob Casey whose "More Interesting People" is published this week. I could add a few tales about Casey:

In the old fire-trap on Wells st. with its single elevator and littered city room Bob had collected a battered desk, a dilapidated hat rack, hundreds of autographed pictures, cartoons and screwball signs and other mementoes.

When the News moved in 1929 to its sleek, scrupulously clean skyscraper, Bob refused to budge unless all the junk, plus the old elevator, was moved to the new building.

I remember H. J. Smith, managing editor, putting his foot down firmly. Bob "resigned." He went home and sulked. H. J. first sent the head copy boy to plead with him. Bob said "No," he'd only move on his own terms. H. J. then sent a reporter, with minor concessions. Still the answer was "No." Neither the city editor nor the news editor could budge him. He wanted all his junk and the old elevator.

ROBERT J. CASEY
. . . teller of tales

Finally H. J. himself made a pilgrimage to Bob's home. Being a kindly man he let him bring everything but the elevator, insisting, however, they be housed in a large windowless inner office.

Perfectly happy, Bob moved into his warren which, of course, immediately became the gathering place of most of the staff.

TOM DUNCAN says his next novel will concern a reporter who fell in love with the daughter of a grocery store proprietor running for public office. In contrast to his 700-page jumbo best-seller "Gus the Great" it will be a very short novel. Scene of both novels is "Tamarack" (actually Des Moines, Iowa) . . . Tom's first novel "Chatauqua" appeared in 1934 with jacket design by the late Grant Wood.

Sinclair Lewis has just finished the script of a new play, "Angela is 22" . . . John Gould has rebuilt his grandfather's house in Maine (see "The House That Jacob Built," coming in November).

Parents of high school kids may be in for a shock when they read "And Thou Shalt Teach Them" due next month from the typewriter of Paul Eldridge. Thirty years in the New York school system gave Eldridge a lot to write about.

"Preposterous," says A. J. Liebling of W. L. White's "Report on the Germans" in his report on the book in October Esquire . . . We agree. Like the criminally stupid American plan to rebuild Germany's war potential, White's book is an insult to the American intelligence.

And speaking of the Whites, I did not realize until I lunched with Walter Johnson, author of "William Allen White's America," the other day how thoroughly he agrees with my thesis that the Sage of Emporia was largely a self-manufactured myth; a shrewd, kindly humanitarian who was also an opportunist. A truth-teller between election years, a party hack during election years. A man who knew full well the advantage of an Emporia dateline on his stories.

And yet, who ever told more truth in fewer words than White when he wrote:

"Frank Munsey, the great publisher, is dead. He contributed to the journalism of his day the talent of a meat packer, the morals of a money-changer, and the manners of an undertaker. He and his kind have about succeeded in transforming a once noble profession into an 8 per cent security. May he rest in trust."

The Workshop Is Focal Point

only element in the American zone not participating in what has come to be a legalized business, fostered by every economic action of Army military government and German authorities. General Clay said as much when he was questioned on that point.

To be altogether fair one ought to go a step further. Americans in Germany are not "on calories." They have comfortable homes; they have good messes; they have reasonable commissaries, they have cocktail lounges; they have adequate incomes. As for the Germans, they have—to make just one point of many—taken everything the DPs rightfully called their own, including the lives of their families.

No DP has tried to deny black market facts to me. There are a lot of things DPs buy in the black market.

They buy vegetables and fresh fruits. Neither item is on their ration. "My kid is going to have as healthful a diet as I can provide," a young DP mother told me. "The Germans manage to get those things. Isn't that enough of an answer?"

They buy materials to equip schools for their youngsters. When they can't get them legally —and usually they can't—they rely on the black market.

They buy worn-out machinery and second-hand motors from the Germans because the United States Army can't find any old surplus to give them. Those items are used to train young and not-so-young men in practical skills. They think that eventually some country may charitably permit them to earn an honest living by those skills.

They buy sewing machines, particularly when they happen to be tailors or seamstresses and the Germans have taken their machines from them.

Occasionally they even buy some decent clothing because they get kind of tired of having people point at them. Particularly they dislike it when the Germans ridicule their shabby appearance. They still have pride, while the world around them has only prejudice.

* * * *

Finally, what about the charge that the DPs are lazy, unskilled and unable to hold down a job?

Sure, many of them haven't the strength to mine coal and many would make poor farmers. But one has only to look at the feverish activity in the camp workshops—the manufacture of kitchen utensils out of tin cans, the creation of pretty hats from rags of felt, the first-class dispensaries, the splendid carpentry, tailoring and metal work—to know that the charge is a lie.

In every camp, life centers around two aspects—the schools, both for children and adults, and the workshops. A successful effort is being made to equip every individual with a trade or skill. Lawyers, merchants, white-collar workers all are learning handicrafts which can be used in any country of resettlement.

An official State Department investigation showed that skilled occupations were reported for 228,000 men and 128,000 women among all displaced persons. These figures are exclusive of persons below the age of 16, the physically disabled, those who take care of children, the sick and unskilled laborers.

The survey showed, for instance, that among the men there were 15,000 professional people, such as doctors, engineers and architects; 60,000 farmers, 18,000 construction workers and 5000 mechanics. Among the women there were 28,000 trained in agriculture, 30,000 domestic servants, 10,000 office workers, 8000 professional occupations, including almost 5000 teachers, 15,000 seamstresses and 4000 nurses.

How Rationing Came to Our Northern Neighbor

tant increase of costs of production. Almost without exception under such circumstances, the the board was forced to decide between a subsidy and a price increase. It is worth while to note that the real period of decontrol began when policy veered for relatively longer periods toward reduction of the subsidies.

From the outset it had been realized that no system of price control could be successful unless increased costs of essential imports were borne directly by the Dominion treasury.

Subsidies were, however, by no means limited to imported commodities. A great variety of domestic subsidies were also paid where it appeared that industry could not continue to function at existing ceilings, where the item was deemed essential, and where any price increase would have had repercussions in other fields to such an extent that it would have threatened the whole ceiling structure.

Extensive use was made of subsidies on processed agricultural commodities such as butter, cheese, flour, and canned fruits and vegetables. Very substantial sums were paid on shoes, furniture, wooden containers, fuel wood, coal, soap, synthetic rubber, and other items.

Farmers Scored

THE fourth method of adjustment, an authorization to sell at prices higher than those in effect between September 15 and October 11, 1941, was used sparingly at first.

But among those farm products, like beef, pork, lamb, veal, potatoes, onions, apples, peaches, eggs and poultry, which move almost directly into consumption, a variety of administrative and political problems forced the board to revise its ceilings from time to time.

As part of the general stabilization policy undertaken in the fall of 1941, a compulsory cost of living bonus was ordered, under which wage rates were to be increased 25 cents per week for every percentage point rise in the official cost of living index.

This bonus had several fairly obvious defects. In the first place, it amounted to a commitment by the Government that if the price policy failed, wages would move up more or less concurrently with prices. It was thus an automatic stimulus to the inflationary spiral. In the second place, it made no attempt to equalize the existing situation, and those wage earners who had been unable to secure wage adjustments prior to the new policy found existing differentials more or less permanently established.

Nevertheless, the cost of living bonus made important contributions to the success of the stabilization program. It guaranteed to labor that if price levels continued to rise, wages would be adjusted accordingly.

At the same time, the bonus placed in the hands of the Prices Board a strong weapon against those who sought price increases, for it could be pointed out that to increase the price would raise the cost of living and thus lead directly to an increase in wages.

Leaned to Subsidies

BY NOVEMBER, 1942, it had become apparent that price increases were threatening to carry the index above 118 (August, 1939, was 100) and that a further wage adjustment would result.

The spiral was beginning, and the Government was faced with a choice of alternatives. It could allow the automatic wage bonus to go into effect and face the prospect of augmented pressure for price increases or subsidies, or it could directly assume the financial burden of the increased cost of living by paying a consumer subsidy. The decision was to follow the latter course.

A program was therefore announced under which the board undertook to pay subsidies sufficient to reduce retail prices of milk by 2 cents a quart, of tea by 10 cents a pound, and of coffee by 4 cents a pound. As a result, the cost of living index was held well below the point where a new cost of living bonus would have been payable.

In place of the major threat to the stabilization program which would have resulted from a further increase in wage costs, the board assumed an annual subsidy bill of about 25 million dollars.

In November, 1943, however, a further wage increase of 35 cents a week became payable. By that time the stabilization program seemed firmly established, and the government decided to seize the opportunity to terminate the automatic increase. Cost of living bonuses were therefore ordered to be incorporated into basic wage rates.

Decontrol Begins

WITH the end of hostilities a shift in emphasis naturally occurred. Strict control over prices continued, but the board became extremely reluctant to introduce new subsidies and made efforts to eliminate the existing ones even if this should in a few cases result in higher consumer prices.

Early in 1946 the Prices Board removed ceiling prices from many specialized and luxury goods where administrative problems were particulary serious or where suppiles seemed adequate, including drugs, tobacco jewelry and toys.

The main change in policy was in the field of subsidies. Among the subsidies canceled or greatly reduced in 1946 there were several major ones, such as the consumer subsidy on milk, the import subsidy on raw wool and wool cloth, and the domestic subsidies on leather goods and synthetic rubber. Two of the major subsidies payable by the Department of Agriculture were also ended during 1946, namely, those on fluid milk and on vegetables for canning, while the Department of Fisheries conceled the subsidy on canned salmon.

As each of those was dropped, the ceiling price for the product was raised by an approximately equivalent amount.

A decisive step in monetary policy was also taken in 1946. This was the announcement that the Foreign Exchange Control Board would buy United States currency at $1 and sell it at $1.005. This meant the elimination of the 10 per cent premium on American currency which had been in effect since September 15, 1939. A similar adjustment was, of course, made for other currencies.

The result was a 10 per cent reduction in the cost of imports in terms of Canadian currency. This change was an important factor in lessening the drain of Canadian products to higher priced foreign markets.

Government Blamed

WAGE ceilings were removed in December, 1946. It seems clear that the removal of wage control was motivated very largely by a desire to avoid the situation which had developed when every demand for a wage increase had to be referred to the War Labor Board in the appropriate province. If the War Labor Board agreed to the increase, then the industry had an almost unanswerable argument for a price increase. If the War Labor Board refused to agree, the government must accept partial responsibility for any resulting work stoppage.

The first decontrol of major commodities took place on January 11, 1947. Among the items removed from control were furniture, paints and varnishes, potatoes, onions and other fresh vegetables, barbering, hairdressing, and beauty parlor services, motion picture admissions and a great variety of building supplies. This was soon followed by an announcement that gasoline products would be exempt after April 1, 1947.

The effects of these changes and of the preceding subsidy cancellations were reflected in substantial price increases in the first quarter of 1947, but despite vigorous protests from many consumer groups and from labor, the government persisted with its policy, and on April 1, 1947, the board issued a much longer list of items which were exempt from ceiling regulations.

The result was that by the beginning of May, 1947, price control regulations had been removed from virtually all goods and services except meats, butter and cheese, grain and its products, soap, shortening and similar oil products, cotton textiles and cotton clothing, farm machinery and equipment, lumber and domestic rentals. Important subsidies remained only on flour and certain feed grains. A month later butter, cheese, and other dairy products were removed from price control.

Rent control began well before the inauguration of the over-all price ceiling. In October, 1941, rent ceilings became nation-wide Later, control of eviction reached the point where no tenant of a self-contained dwelling unit could be forced to move without a hearing before an officer of the board's rental administration.

Karig's Book Full of Laughs

ZOTZ! by Walter Karig (Rinehart; $2.75).

THE author of this novel, one of the two Books-of-the-Month of October, pretends that while he was in wartime Washington, it was called to his attention that John Jones could blow the be-jiminy out of every Jap and German.

Dr. Jones himself is the attention-caller. An authority on obscure ancient languages, he gets into his possession an antique formula which, with the proper preliminaries of blood-letting and abracadabra, enables him to point his finger at you, exclaim "Zotz!" and wither you to an ash. He's a sort of walking atomic bomb.

All of a sudden he realizes that he controls the one secret needed by the Allies to win victory. If he could be transported to the right place, point at the enemy and say zotz fast enough, the enemy could be fried to a crisp. The thing to do, obviously, it to tell the President. And so the rest of the novel is concerned with the difficulty of getting close enough to the Chief Executive to confide in him this momentous secret. Zotz is not effective against the hardy race of bureaucrats, and it will not melt red tape.

Karig has a first-rate idea, and he starts off at a swift pace which for many pages leaves you gasping for breath. You may think Jones' suspicions of his friends are extraneous and detract from the total effect, but there are more real laughs here than most supposedly funny books contain.

A bombshell of a novel about Washington D. P.'s
. . . about men like Matt Wells who stopped being fighting liberals . . . and became men hanging on to jobs. Or resigning jobs. Or men taking another drink and then another and then too many more. Or fighting it out with their wives on a basis of principle and losing as Matt Wells lost. Or ratting on friends and long admired co-workers. Or squealing in the investigations. Or making too many passes at too many girls as though sexual successes could somehow fend off the sure-to-come failures of the next day's work.
In telling Matt Wells' story, Benjamin Appel has done more than create a fast-moving, exciting novel about a man caught in a dilemma. He has caught the drama that is being enacted in our Government's agencies at a fateful time of swift transition.
"I read it . . . absolutely fascinated by the dramatic and meaningful story of what is now taking place in the buildings which house the men who run our country."

The Magazine Rack

By Katharine Graham

EVERYONE knows about the golden opportunity that lies before every male American baby—the chance to be President. Something new has now been added, the chance that he may grow up to be Assistant President. Anyway, Leigh White, in his Saturday Evening Post profile of Clark Clifford, thinks the job he holds unofficially is here to stay.

CLIFFORD

"The American Presidency has proliferated such vast responsibilities in recent years that sooner or later it will have to be formally enlarged." The job might eventually be called Secretary of the Cabinet, White thinks. But in the meantime Clifford, who only a few short years ago was an obscure St. Louis trial lawyer with a friend named "Jake" Vardaman, in effect fills the bill. How it all happened and Clifford's record to date has never been as well told.

Less spectacular, but in its way as important a piece of reporting, is the story of another Washingtonian, Gen. Paul R. Hawley, Chief Medical Director of the Veteran's Administration. Only son and grandson of a country general practitioner, Hawley entered the Army rather than put up with the trials of country doctoring. Today, says Greer Williams, he still "reminds people of the old family doctor", but his family consists of the 18 million veterans for whom he must provide medical care when needed.

Hawley received baptism literally by fire as organizer of the medical side of the Normandy landings. Even this couldn't prepare him adequately for the tougher battles he has since fought and in the main won with patronage and red tape.

With all the remarkable progress veterans' medicine has made, however, Hawley "admits some doubt about the future," says the author. If it doesn't get the same kind of support from General Bradley's successor; Hawley states, as it did from Bradley himself," the medical service will deteriorate rapidly, and in no time at all will have reached the same unhappy state it was in one year ago."

"DEATH Through Neglect" is the title of Albert Q. Maisel's outstanding story in Look on infant diarrhea epidemics in hospitals, which last year claimed more newborn babies' lives than ever before. There is only one reason for it, according to Maisel, and that is carelessness both in aseptic techniques and in the application of the simple rules for isolating contagion.

Proof of this, Maisel shows, is Chicago's remarkably clean record. After an outbreak there 10 years ago, city health officials moved in, drew up "Regulations for the Conduct of Maternity Hospitals and Nurseries for the Newborn," and have enforced them rigidly ever since.

Washington is quite a different story. "Health department records show that, since 1941, six of the eight privately supported hospitals of the Nation's Capital have had 12 separate diarrhea outbreaks with a total of 66 deaths. One hospital had three successive epidemics. All of the hospitals were found, in repeated investigations, to be operating without essential equipment, or indulging in slipshod practices that were a permanent invitation to infection."

On the lighter side, Look offers the story of Ham Fisher's Joe Palooka, the champ, who appears daily and Sunday in you know what—and 600 others besides. Fisher just can't decide whether Anne Howe and his hero should get married, reports Bob Brumby. Anne's a nice girl and they've known each other since 1932, but "the wrong wife can ruin a fighter," Fisher points out.

ANYONE who comes across the appealing 13-year-old picture of Franklin Delano Roosevelt on the cover of Life will be sure to turn back to his boyhood letters, published in advance of their appearance this fall in book form. The very early ones, in many ways typical of the wealthy youngster who is forced by an insistent governess to sit down and write his mother, are still revealing. The older ones naturally are more so.

FORRESTAL

FDR seems to have developed the light touch at a remarkably early age, along with a zest for living and extreme snobbery that went with his Groton-Harvard education. Along with tenderness and affection for his mother, he also displayed a firm independence of her evident desire to possess her only son, especially when informing her of his proposed marriage.

Life contributes to this week's bumper crop of Washington profiles one on National Defense Secretary James V. Forrestal.

AN INDICTMENT of the "plebe system" is one of the main charges made by Ralph Lee Smith's effective "Why I Resigned from Annapolis," in the Atlantic. What in another college goes for tough old-fashioned horseplay is carried out in dead earnest at the Naval Academy with the supposedly lofty intention of instilling courage and discipline, Smith charges. Instead it instills "a callous lesson in the procurement of pleasure through physical and mental pain of another," Smith thought. The academic course comes in for an equally tough panning.

A Double Record Of Great West

With nearly 400 photographs, paintings and sketches by the father and text by the son, this handsome and important book is a double record of pioneering in the field of photography and in our great West.

Jackson senior, raised on a farm near Peru, N. Y., served in the Civil War and succumbed, in 1866, to a desire to go west. He was even less of an artist than Thomas Moran, whom he knew, but he was a master photographer.

Adams' Remarkable Prophecy

47-Year-Old Book Packs Strong Punch

By Sterling North

AMERICA'S ECONOMIC SUPREMACY. By Brooks Adams; with an evaluation by Marquis W. Childs. Harpers. 194 pp. $2.50.

HOW many citizens of this planet knew in 1900:

That the British Empire was already doomed?

That the center of world trade and civilization was shifting from London to New York, and that America would have to take over England's leadership or perish?

That a head-on collision between the United States and Russia for world supremacy was a foregone conclusion?

So far as I can determine, there were only two Americans of that era well enough informed to come to these startling conclusions. They were Brooks Adams and his brother, Henry—scions of the long and distinguished line which gave America two Presidents.

Henry Adams, using his recondite rule of phase (an attempt to assess historical trends mathematically) had already come to the pessimistic realization that mankind would probably blow itself off the face of the globe by the year 1950.

Brooks Adams, who was less mystical about his fatalism, less ironic and sarcastic in his style, but equally well informed at least in the realms of economics and modern history did not find modern man in as dire peril as did his cathedral-loving brother.

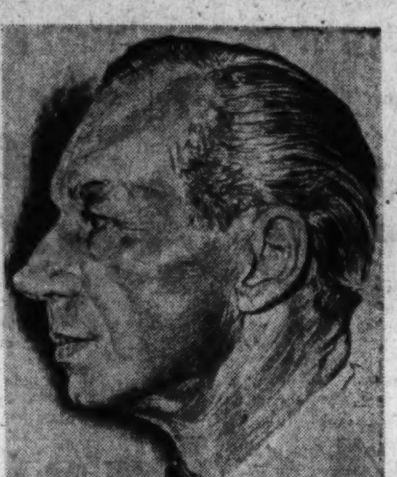
Brooks Adams' thinking was what later came to be called "geopolitical." He looked at vast, backward Russia, shuddered to think what a Russian revolution would mean; assessed the strategic and economic advantages of the great landmass under the Czar, added the shrewd conclusion that Germany would finally furnish the perfect ally for Russia, then attempted to assess America's chances in case of such an alliance.

CHILDS

His thinking was, of course, preatomic. But in judging America as a naval power against Russia as a land power he clearly stated our present dilemma.

The Adams brothers, having minutely traced world trade and power from the Tigris and Euphrates to the Mediterranean, thence to Amsterdam and London, knew by 1900 that Europe was a shell ready to collapse.

Thirteen years before Spengler had completed his manuscript they knew the principal arguments foreshadowing the decline of European man. More than a decade before Veblen had traced Britain's fatal weaknesses they knew why England would follow Rome and Persia into oblivion. If they underestimated the fighting heart of the British which miraculously brought a bankrupt nation through two World Wars, it was possibly due to an overestimation of British weakness in the Boer War. Let us hope that they also overestimated the ignorance and somnolence of the average American.



Burton Rascoe, author of "We Were Interrupted"

WE WERE INTERRUPTED. By Burton Rascoe. Doubleday. 342 pp. $4.

THE cocktail parties were bigger and more lethal, the perpetual literary renaissance excited more comment, literary feuds were taken more seriously, people lost more and more in the stock market in Burton Rascoe's 1920's—the era of wonderful (literary) nonsense.

A short spell on his father's farm in Oklahoma (which finally spurted over $800,000 worth of oil) was only a breather before Rascoe came to New York as associate editor of McCall's under the fabulous Harry Burton. Rascoe came from a Middle West bubbling with creative excitement. Carl Sandburg, Ben Hecht, Dreiser, Masters, Sherwood Anderson and Harriet Monroe were stalwarts in Chicago—a city which H. L. Mencken called "the capital of American literature." A few of the old guards were still around when I took over the Chicago Daily News book page some years later.

If Rascoe did nothing else in this book except deflate the pretentious, self-publicizing Algonquin crowd it would be worth the ink and paper. Ego (of which Rascoe has his share) may in part explain his distaste for Alec Woollcott and his inflated coterie. But 95 per cent of his indictment is incontrovertible. Here, as elsewhere in the book the style crackles with sly malice—when not singing with sheer enthusiasm.

GANDHI AND STALIN. By Louis Fischer. Harper. 183 pp. $2.50.

I THINK it was Clifton Fadiman who first offered the ironic slogan, "Thinkers of the world, unite! You have nothing to lose but your brains."

But a heartening number of writers who at one time were taken in by Communist propaganda and Marxian dialects are showing healthy signs of recovery. The best brain among the former converts belongs to Louis Fischer.

His present completely private "line" favors a mixed economy; a return to private and public morality; checks and balances limiting power in the hands of capitalists, labor leaders and politicians; obliteration of racial prejudice and religious bigotry; enough control over American industry so that our boom-bust cycles do not destroy the last great democratic nation thus playing neatly into the hands of Moscow; an admission by liberals and idealists that Stalin is unscrupulous, that communism is unscrupulous, and that a mere "dictatorship of the proletariat" does not provide the millenium; an admission by reactionaries that some degree of socialism is inevitable (certainly throughout Europe and Asia); and finally a bloodless war to the death against the unappeasable Stalinites—by making democracy work; by showing the world that democracy is a better system; by feeding and clothing and educating and giving hope to our poor.

Fischer realizes that democracy can succeed only by example; never by adopting the methods of our enemies. As Gandhi by personal example has begun to crack the vicious caste system; as Gandhi by example has moved the hearts of even his enemies, so all truly ethical, democratic leaders and citizens must make the effort in their private and public lives which could reform this fighting planet into a peaceful and happy world.

Stalin, on the other hand, is held up as the direct antithesis of everything we can hope for; he represents infinite police power, slave labor, a nation of informers and minor dictators, destruction of personal dignity, and destruction of the Bill of Rights.

FISCHER

Fischer has lived with Gandhi for days and weeks. He lived in Russia for some 14 years, and has been with Stalin for as much as six hours at a time. He knows the subjects of this monograph. And he has thought through an impressive number of world problems.

He is convinced:

That one world for the time being is impossible. (Because of Russia).

That the creation of a democratic international world government (without Russia, if necessary) will not bring on war. Quite the opposite.

That in any struggle between a democratic federated world and the Communists, the world-federation would win—probably without resort to war.

Lucius Beebe, left, and Charles M. Clegg, who combined their indubitably transcendant talents to turn out a book called "Mixed Train Daily." Beebe, he of the rich prose and the epicure's taste, contributed the verbiage, Clegg took the pictures. Beebe will be in Washington on October 14 to speak at the Washington Post's Book and Author Luncheon at the Statler. Walter Karig, a review of whose book you'll find on the opposite page, also has a Book and Author Luncheon date that day

Goody-Goody

THE BISHOP'S MANTLE, by Agnes Sligh Turnbull (Macmillan; $3)

Old Bishop Laurens goes on bravely to his reward in the next life, and his grandson Hilary takes over the family reputation and keeps it bright and shiny; God and the right triumph and Jezebel and a nasty rich old vestryman are put in their places. For this wicked world it's an extraordinarily goody-goody novel.

Schoolboy Chinese

With gentle irony John Espey turns in Tales Out of School (Knopf, $2.50) to the nostalgic '20s in the Kuling American school, situated in a remote Chinese valley. In the sternest outpost-of-empire tradition, its aim was to be thoroughly American. Deftly Espey makes the impact of American customs on Chinese locale, peppered with schoolboy pranks, into stories often whimsical, sometimes downright mirth-provoking and occasionally sad.

Frances Parkinson Keyes

STORY-TELLER TO THE WORLD

WE hear a great deal these days about the crucial need for giving the world a truer picture of American life. What is often overlooked is the understanding of our country that foreign translations of American novels are giving to foreign readers.

Frances Parkinson Keyes is, internationally, one of the most popular of all American novelists. Her books have been translated, so far, into ten languages: French, German, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, Finnish, Spanish, Portuguese, Czechoslovak, and Rumanian. And novels like hers have given the rest of the world a much more faithful picture of what we are really like than any movie about millionaires and chorus girls, any news story about gang wars and lynchings, or any political speech about the atomic bomb. For these books present American life as it is, and as it is lived by each of us.

Mrs. Keyes' novels have all been bestsellers in the United States; but a good story here is a good story anywhere, and they are as popular in other countries as they are here at home. The tremendous sweep of their success extends from the Finnish Arctic to the shores of the Antarctic in Patagonia.

Books that show us as we are, prove to other peoples how close we are to them. The Frenchman who reads The River Road, as BELLE HELOISE, learns that we do not always act the way we did in OD's stuffed with Army pay. And he comes to realize that the French language and French traditions are cherished in parts of this country just as they are in his own. The Mexican, who reads it under the Spanish title, EL CAMINO DEL RIO, finds that we're far different at home from what we are as tourists—and much more the kind of people he'd like to know. The Swede, opening his copy of KARNEVAL I NEW ORLEANS (Crescent Carnival), discovers that Americans (like Scandinavians and everybody else) understand hospitality, gaiety, and subtle, un-Hollywoodish romance.

Frances Parkinson Keyes' American characters are certainly never goody-goodies. If they were, no foreigner could believe in them. For that matter, neither could we. These characters are people; like most people they have their faults. As a matter of fact, any story about people without faults would probably be very dull.

So, as good books should, these consistently bestselling novels all show something of what is wrong with us Americans, as well as some of the things that are right. But they also show American problems being solved, America concerned about her flaws, and determined to remedy them. When Frances Parkinson Keyes looks at her people, she sees many things that are not good. But she knows that when we have the will, there is little in ourselves that we cannot cure. And her very American optimism is based not on blind faith but on her superb knowledge of this country and the people who live in it—from Vermont Yankees to Unreconstructed Rebels—from FFV's to Italian immigrants.

She never loses sight of the fact that America's past is in Europe . . . and this surely is one of the things that bring her wonderful stories so close to the hearts and lives of people from Lisbon to Helsinki. For in the growth and destiny of America all the peoples of Europe have a share, earned by the settlers they sent here. And Europeans like to know that we have not forgotten that our roots are the same as theirs.

And this author knows that the links that bind us to the rest of mankind are more than just history. The theme of international marriage recurs again and again in her works—and certainly the marriage in ALSO THE HILLS between a Vermont Yankee and a New Orleans Creole is as international as the one in the forthcoming CAME A CAVALIER, between a New England girl and a French noble.

This is a theme as old and as beloved as story-telling itself. The Book of Ruth was one variation. Many of the works of Henry James form another. In CAME A CAVALIER, the girl Mrs. Keyes calls Constance is granted one of the most profound and challenging experiences that can come to any woman—to transplant herself for love of a man, to his strange and alien world, and to make his world her own. This eagerly awaited novel is destined for international popularity from the very beginning. It will be published in the United States on October 24, and in France in 1948. As Vint un Cavalier, it will add one more enduring support to an understanding that is stronger than treaties and more efficient than foreign policies . . . by presenting us and our way of life to the people of France and the world, not as we are reputed to be, or would like to appear, but as we are and can be.

—his first-hand account!

The Washington Post

Now you can learn the whole truth of what went on at the Yalta meetings between President Roosevelt, Marshal Stalin and Prime Minister Churchill, and the Truman-Attlee-Stalin talks at Potsdam. James F. Byrnes, "assistant president" and later Secretary of State, attended these meetings. He took down the Yalta conversations in the shorthand he learned as a youthful court reporter. At the other conferences he took extensive notes. His story, "Speaking Frankly," answers such questions as these:

> Is it true that Stalin brushed aside the Pope's views on peace by sneering, "How many divisions does he have?"
> What did Churchill and Roosevelt say about Poland's new boundaries and the Soviet-sponsored Polish government?
> What did Stalin and Churchill say to each other about the big-power veto in the proposed United Nations?
> Why did Roosevelt consent to three United Nations votes for Russia through admission of White Russia and the Ukraine?
> What secret agreements were made at Yalta? How did Russia get the Kurile Islands north of Japan?
> Is it true that United States-Soviet relations became strained only after the death of President Roosevelt?
> What government fell when Vishinsky slammed a door?
> What Churchill charges did Stalin dismiss as "fairy tales"?
> What happened to British foreign policy when Churchill and Eden were replaced by Attlee and Bevin?

After the death of President Roosevelt, Mr. Byrnes was asked to become Secretary of State. His articles tell frankly why his coming appointment was kept secret for months, why he refused to attend the San Francisco Conference, and what went on at the first Council of Foreign Ministers. Here is the complete story of the Wallace resignation from the Cabinet, including the actual teletype message to President Truman which Secretary Byrnes sent from Paris. Here is Mr. Byrnes' frank opinion of Stalin and Molotov, of Soviet aspirations and what we should do about them, of the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan.

James F. Byrnes served in all three branches of our Government: as Representative and Senator, as Supreme Court Justice, and as Director of Economic Stabilization, Director of War Mobilization, and Secretary of State. His interpretation of the events he saw, the conversations he heard and the incidents in which he played a part makes tremendously interesting reading. Irish Win, Texas Romps, Navy Defeated

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Oct. 4.—Yankee President Larry MacPhail ruled out the old practice of Yankee players lending their names to ghost-written articles on the World Series, but Branch Rickey permitted Brooklyn players to accept fees for same . . . Baseball Commissioner Chandler has indicated by every means except a positive statement he will not permit the Dodgers to give Leo Durocher the World Series share they voted him . . . The mystery of the World Series was the snubbing of Aaron Robinson, his best catcher, by Bucky Harris, who moved him into the line-up in desperation today in the fifth game after the Dodgers had stolen bases against Yogi Berra and Sherman Lollar . . . Robinson obviously was in Harris' doghouse for reasons unknown, and is certain to be traded by the Yankees . . . On one point, the series experts are agreed: This week has produced the worst catching in the 44 years of World Series . . . Second Baseman Eddie Stanky has been lifted for a pinch-hitter by the Dodgers only twice this season and it has been sure-fire strategy. Arky Vaughan batted for Stanky and won a vital game with the Cubs, and yesterday it was Cookie Lavagetto taking Stanky's turn at bat and getting the big ninth-inning hit . . . Ted Williams saw the fourth game by television in a Brooklyn tavern, after getting as far as the Ebbets Field gates without a ticket, and unable to buy one.

POVICH

THIS WORLD SERIES will go down as the most illogical. The Yanks won the first game on four hits, and the Dodgers won the fourth game on one hit. Hugh Casey made one pitch and received credit for a victory. Yogi Berra, an .000 batter, pinch hit for Sherman Lollar, a .667 hitter, and made the first pinch homerun in World Series history . . . In the mails this week, Al Schacht received a 1934 All-Star game souvenir tie clasp he had lost years ago in California. The finder, a radio listener in Compton, Calif., forwarded the clasp to Schacht after hearing his clowning performance described in the Yankee Stadium games . . . The Yankees are being second-guessed for their failure to bunt in this series, but they haven't bunted all season and they won the pennant by 12 games . . . Vincent X. Flaherty, featured columnist of the Los Angeles Examiner, is scripting the life of Walter Johnson for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and will be in Washington this week on a material search . . . Dan Topping, one third owner of the Yankees, found two utter strangers, ugly ones, in his special box at the first Ebbets field game while two of his close friends were outside with their pockets picked . . . It's strictly county fair in the Brooklyn grandstands where hawkers will sell you neckties autographed by the Dodgers, pennants, handkerchiefs and miniature models of Dixie Walker's bat.

HUGH CASEY of the Dodgers now has two distinctions. He made history in the fourth game by throwing only one ball and receiving credit as the winning pitcher. Before that he was known as the only big league pitcher who lives over a saloon. He's a tavern owner in Flatbush . . . Any day now, Clark Griffith is expected to announce that George Myatt, the infielder he sold to Jersey City, will take over as manager of the Nats' Chattanooga Farm . . . The longest contract any baseball manager ever received was a 25-year document Bill Veeck gave Charley Grimm a few seasons back when they operated the Milwaukee club . . . Fan sentiment in Cleveland is preventing Veeck from trading Lou Boudreau, his manager, whom Veeck holds in high esteem as a player but is not smitten with his managerial ability . . . Washington-born Pat Flaherty, who pitched for the Boston Braves and later was an end in pro football, is now being considered for the title role in "The Life of Babe Ruth," being written for the movies by Bob Considine . . . Overheard in Brooklyn when Peewee Reese took a called third strike: "Them Bums can't make them hits with them bats on them shoulders." . . . Coach Clyde Sukeforth, second in command of the Dodgers, was Georgetown's best outfielder in 1923-24-25.

THE ILLINOIS Boxing Commission's banning of Middleweight Champion Rocky Graziano after recently discovering Rocky's dismal service record and dishonorable discharge is a laugh. Every reporter on the fight beat knew of Graziano's malfeasances for three years. . . . Coach Ray Flaherty of the New York Football Yankees reports that Buddy Young is the most popular player among the players on his 33-man squad . . . Jackie Robinson of the Dodgers barely retained today the distinction of being the only Negro player to figure in a World Series. The Dodgers had Dan Bankhead, big pitcher from Memphis, warming up when Hank Behrman was in trouble in the seventh inning . . . The Dodger's sudden switch to Rex Barney as their starting pitcher today instead of Vic Lombardi, had a quick effect on the odds. The series quotation against the Dodgers went from 7 to 5 to 9 to 5 . . . Not only series tickets were being scalped in New York this week, but $5 a day hotel reservations were being purveyed for $25.

'Skins Trot Out New Players, And Baugh, in Opener Today

By Bill Burnett

Post Reporter

That wonderful autumn nonsense starts all over again at Griffith Stadium today.

The Redskins christen their 1947 home season, meeting the Pittsburgh Steelers in a 2 o'clock game, and once more Washington's violent professional football addicts can enjoy life.

As many of them as the place will hold— 36,594 paying and about 2000, including sportswriters, getting in otherwise—will jam together for firsthand information on their idols.

They'll have nice weather this time. The Weather Bureau, realizing its forecast makes no difference whatever to the hardy Redskin fan, yesterday said today will be "mostly sunny and continued warm."

It figures to be a hot day for the Redskins. They're supposed to post their first National Football League victory, handing the Steelers their third loss. And the Redskins figure to win easily, if last week's opener in Philadelphia meant anything.

That was a 45-42 loss, remember? Any team that can score 42 points, even in losing, should romp over a Pittsburgh outfit that was shellacked in a Los Angeles game and lost a 10-7 nod to Detroit in another.

Besides Washington still has Sammy Baugh. He passed to five touchdowns last week, is in perfect physical condition, and should do even better with climax runner Dick Todd ready to go for the first time this season.

It is the seventeenth meeting between the Redskins and Steelers and the Skins will be trying to kill a sort of jinx. Last year, their two efforts earned nothing more than a 14-14 tie and a 14-7 licking by Pittsburgh.

Lujack Paces 40-0 Victory Over Pitt

By Duke Moran

Pittsburgh, Oct. 4 (AP).—The Notre Dame gridiron express ran late today but Engineer John Lujack's adroitness generated enough steam to bring the Fighting Irish home on schedule with a 40-6 victory over a surprisingly tough band of Pitt Panthers.

It was Notre Dame's first start and the 64,333 fans on hand blinked in disbelief as the Panthers made things hotter than the 80-degree temperature for almost a full half.

The Irish started off to do the expected by scoring in the first six minutes as Terry Brennan plunged three yards for a touchdown in climax to a 57-yard march. But from there on until the last few minutes of the half, it was strictly a Pitt show.

A fumble on the one-foot line balked one Panther touchdown after the kickoff following the Irish score. But Pitt recovered a fumble on the Irish 21 with the second quarter half gone and went on to score, Sub Halfback Carl Depasqua running over from seven yards out.

Notre Dame blocked a placement by Halfback Louis Cecconi which would have given the Panthers a 7-7 tie.

Lujack, the brain behind the Notre Dame "T", took over from there and turned what might have been an upset into strictly no contest.

Lujack Fires Away

He fired the first of three touchdown passes to sub End Douglas Waybright in a 10-yard scoring play which climaxed an 80-yard march as the half ended.

Lujack's passing and his dazzling 25-yard run down the middle tore off most of the yardage in that drive.

Georgia Belts LSU, 35 to 19

Athens, Ga., Oct. 4 (AP).—Georgia tied a knot in the tail of the mighty Lion from Louisiana State here today and then kicked him all over Sanford Field for a surprise 35-19 victory—the first in eight attempts — before 40,000 fans.

The Tigers, rated as the Southeastern Conference's most powerful outfit, got away to a 12-10 lead in the opening five minutes, and looked geared for a terrific rout, but Georgia knocked the props from under the visitors in a roaring comeback and kept belting them until the final whistle.

Johnny Rausch, Georgia quarterback, was directly responsible for the first two Tiger scores with erratic ball-handling, but he redeemed himself after that to toss three scoring passes.

Nestorak, Reid in Form

Stan Nestorak, who has played little since he figured prominently in Georgia's 1944 win over Alabama, came back today to spark the Bulldog running attack with Floyd Reid. Nestorak gained 52 yards in eight tries while Reid picked up 56 in seven attempts.

Dan Edwards, Bulldog captain, took two of Rauch's scoring passes and the other was pulled in by Lukie Brunson. Reid scored the other two tallies on the ground. The Bulldogs cashed in on drives of 63 yeards, 45 yards, 65 yards, 69 yards and then 21 yards after a 50-yard pass-interception runback by Ken McCall. The Tigers went 34 yards on one drive and 52 on their last with an 18-yard pass interception by Abner Wimberly accounting for the second score.

Tigers Take Lead

The Tigers grabbed their 12-0 lead in the opening minutes, going 34 yards for the first score after recovering a Georgia fumble. The score was an outright gift from Rauch as he practically handed the ball to Abner Wimberly, LSU end, on the Georgia 18 while trying to

Vanderbilt Upsets 'Bama

Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 4 (U.P.).—Vanderbilt used both its own and Alabama's passing attack today to snatch a 14 to 7 upset victory before a sell-out crowd of 22,000.

Jamie Wade's pass to John North, good for 61 yards, counted one Commodore tally and Red Sanders' hard-fighting eleven converted an interception of an Alabama heave into the other.

Hurlin' Harry Gilmer, the Tide's great passer, couldn't get Alabama's balky motor running smoothly until the last four minutes, but even in this time he produced one quick touchdown and threw a desperate, 65-yard, uncaught fourth-down pass to the goalline with only seconds to go in hopes of getting a tie, but it was too late.

Vandy Scores First

The victory was Vanderbilt's second and its first in the Southeastern Conference after the upset of Northwestern. t was Alabama's second straight loss, following a 21-20 defeat by Tulane last week.

Vanderbilt struck sharply from its own 23 late in the first quarter, two running plays making 15 and then Wade passed 26 yards to North who scooted 35 more for the score.

Late in the fourth period Alabama's Monk Moseley passed desperately from behind his own goal. Vanderbilt's Jim Baughn collared it on the 26 and brought it back to the seven. Bob Berry sliced left tackle on the next play for a touchdown.

Gilmer Enters Game

Not in the game when Vanderbilt scored its second touchdown, Gilmer rushed in and produced a score in four plays with a 55-yard march. He passed 24 to Carl Mims, who fell a yard for the score.

Most of the time Vanderbilt's forwards kept Alabama's line off balance and hit so hard even the normally glue-fingered Gilmer fumbled three times, Vanderbilt recovering two. Vanderbilt's Zack Clinard helped with a 41.6-yard punting average.

Both teams saw touchdown drives spoiled by pass interceptions. Alabama's Lowell Tew

George Washington Loses Out To VMI in Final Period, 13 to 7

By Herb Heft

Post Reporter

Lynchburg, Va., Oct. 4.—Virginia Military Institute pushed over a last quarter touchdown to defeat George Washington University, 13-7, here tonight.

The Colonials held a 70-0 halftime lead which was narrowed to 7-6 at the end of the third period. It was George Washington's second straight defeat.

FIRST PERIOD

The Keydets came up with the only threat of the first period with Halfback Joe Gantt, a Lynchburg boy, strutting his stuff before the hometown folks.

Receiving a Bob Mazero punt on the VMI 25, Gantt, a 170-pound senior, streaked 60 yards down the right sideline before being brought down from behind by Dick Koester on the GW 15. However, two bucks at the line and two passes picked up only 5 yards and the Keydet drive died on the 5.

SECOND PERIOD

The Colonials struck into touchdown-land late in the second quarter after an earlier drive had fizzled on the Keydet 12.

The score came on a 52-yard march, with little Jimmy Kline picking up most of the yardage to the VMI 10.

There, Koester, the big former Washington (D. C.) Roosevelt High end, took the hand-off from Fullback Joe Bernot and loped around right end the remaining 10 yards into the end zone. Frank Cavallo converted.

THIRD PERIOD

After the Keydets found the Colonial line virtually impenetrable, they broke out a spectacular aerial attack, Quarterback Joe Veltri doing the pitching.

Veltri tossed first over Colonial Al Dugoff's head to End Jimmy Gill, who sped to the G. W. 30 before Koester nailed him.

Two plays later it was Veltri to End Thatcher Watson, who had crep behind G. W.' Frank Cavello. Watson raced to the two. Billy Stewart crashed over for the touchdown, but when Ken Carrington's placement was wide, the Keydets still trailed, 7-6

Fourth Period

Veitri's passing pulled the game out of the fire for VMI, with two minutes left when he completed six, including a 14-yard payoff toss to Bob Patton. Ken Carrington's conversion attempt was good, just before the game ended. Final score, VMI 13, GW 7.

Contest Starts Tuesday

So You Think You Can Pick Winners? Here's Chance to See Army-Navy Game

THE WASHINGTON POST will begin a Pick the Winner football contest this week. It will be conducted weekly, continuing through the weekend of November 22 and 23.

One winner will be determined each week.

At the end of the contest, each of the six winners will be entitled to an all-expense-paid trip for two (2) persons to the Army-Navy game, November 29, at Philadelphia, as guests of The Washington Post.

This trip will include two tickets to the Army-Navy game for each of the winners.

In addition, each weekly winner will receive four tickets to an outstanding game in this area for the next weekend. These weekly tickets may be for a Washington Redskins or Baltimore Colts game in professional play or to one of the top college games.

The contest will be conducted on this basis: Tuesday morning 21 major games, selected from contests over the country, will be published in The Washington Post.

You fans will have the privilege of picking the winners of those 21 games. The person with the highest grade will be announced as the winner each week.

For complete details of the contest, be sure to see Tuesday's paper.

Columbia Dominates 13-6 Game

By Frank L. Dennis

Post Reporter

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 4.—Columbia literally kicked Navy into its tenth straight football defeat this afternoon, the second of the new season.

Although the score was only 13 to 6, Columbia was much the superior and the fact that Navy came within 3½ yards of a tie testifies more to its courage than to its cohesion.

A crowd of 22,000, its attention divided for a time between the game in Thompson Stadium and the spectacle of a big gray carrier, British small boats and dancing white-sailed boats in adjacent Chesapeake Bay.

Russell's Punting Superb

But before the game was over the spectators were concentrating their interest on a slim 21-year-old Columbian, Robert Russell of Worcester, Mass.

STATISTICS

Columbia		Navy
16	First downs	7
207	Yards gained rushing (net)	138
17	Forward passes attempted	11
6	Forward passes completed	3
133	Yards by forward passes	47
4	Forward passes intercepted by	1
55	Yards runback intercepted passes	0
41	Punting average (from scrimmage)	38
37	Total yards, all kicks returned	85
3	Opponent's fumbles recovered	4
40	Yards lost by penalties	5

He would enter the game only to punt and this he did to perfection. His pin-point kicking was like the proximity-fuse shell. Every time one of his kicks got within the 5-yard line it went out of bounds.

The result was that Navy was sealed deep in its own terrain most of the time. One of Russell's kicks set up the decisive touchdown, which came in the third quarter after a 6-6 half-time score.

Hawkins Scores on Lateral

Navy made the first score in the second period on a 54-yard run by Bill Hawkins of Richmond, Va., after a 1-yard lateral out of the T-formation from Quarterback Bob Horne of Plainville, Tex.

Only a few plays previously, Navy had been hammered back to its 1-foot line by the big, veteran New York City team.

It was in that goal-line stand that Navy reached its zenith today. In four tries the giant forwards and the fast backs who have

Tarheels Beaten, 34-0

Austin, Tex., Oct. 4 (AP).—The University of Texas turned on the heat to smash North Carolina, 34-0, today.

A crowd of 47,000 saw the Longhorns combine the accurate passing of Quarterback Bobby Layne with the power and speed of Fullback Tommy Landry, Right Halfback Randall Clay and Left Halfback Byron Gillory to win their third victory of the season.

Texas' first tally came on a 44-yard pass from Layne to Gillory, who got in behind the Tarheels' Johnny Clements to grab the ball on the 30 and go across standing up.

Longhorns Take to Air

The heave, climaxed a 59-yard drive, and it was Texas 7, North Carolina 0, at the end of five minutes of play.

The Longhorns hit by way of the airlanes again early in the second quarter, when Raymond Jones, a substitute fullback, passed to Substitute Right End Peppy Blount on the two-yard line. The play went for 28 yards, and the Longhorns had the Tarheels, 14 to 0.

North Carolina came back on the sharp-shooting passes on Left Half Charlie (Choo Choo) Justice and Pupa. Catches by Clements and Right End Bobby Cox moved the Tarheels to the Texas 40, but then Justice's pass intended for Cox bounced out of Longhorn Bobby Coyle's arms, and Jones grabbed it to halt the Tarheel drive.

Texas exploded again, driving 60 yards to pay dirt with Tom Landry plunging the last two yards to run the score to 20-0 at the half.

Tarheels Threaten

North Carolina again threatened, pass plays taking the ball to the Texas three-yard line, but the half ended before the Tarheels scored.

The Longhorn's fourth tally came on a one-yard plunge over center by Clay at the end of an 84-yard march which began when Jones intercepted a pass behind his goal line and brought it out to the 16.

Clay collected his second touchdown when he again rammed through from the one half-yard line at the end of a 47-yard drive in which the Texas second team employed straight power.

Tech Pushover For Virginia

By Morris Siegel

Post Reporter

Roanoke, Va., Oct. 4.—The University of Virginia's Cavaliers were hardly that today as they ran over, around and through Virginia Tech to score a 41-7 victory before a near-capacity crowd of 23,000 spectators.

The Cavaliers had absolutely no respect for their football rivals of 52 years standing.

The lopsided triumph they achieved was the third largest score run up since the series was started back in 1895.

This was a highly polished, smooth-clicking, T-formation unit Coach Art Guepe threw at the Tech Gobblers that bids fair to be one of the best ever turned out at Charlottesville.

STATISTICS

Virginia		VPI
19	First downs	10
262	Yards gained rushing (net)	100
13	Forward passes attempted	20
8	Forward passes completed	7
146	Yards by forward passes	124

25	Yards gained runback of int. passes	22
46.4	Punting average from scrimmage	39.8
62	Total yards all kicks returned	152
3	Opponents' fumbles recovered	0
125	Yards lost by penalties	41

So versatile was the Virginia attack that six different players scored the Cavalier's six touchdowns.

Generating the steam for the high-powered Virginia attack were seemingly endless number of jackrabbit backs who were sprung into the clear on well-executed quick opening plays.

The Gobblers, outplayed in every department, had nothing to gobble about except a fourth period touchdown resulting from a blocked kick. They made only other serious bid, driving down to the Cavalier three-yard line just as the half ended. Other than those two forays, they were an outclassed team and it didn't take long to learn it.

Virginia scored on its eighth play from scrimmage when Sophomore Billy Pennel streaked 21 yards after receiving a nifty lateral from Quarterback George Neff. Fullback George Grimes, a stalwart figure in the Virginia victory, kicked the first of his five extra points and the Cavaliers were out front to stay, and how.

The score remained 7-0 until the first play of the second period.

On The Line

With Considine

CONSIDINE

NEW YORK, OCT. 4 (INS).—There haven't been many World Series like the 1947 edition, and if it's all the same to you, I hope there won't be any more.

It has been pure panic since it began last Tuesday; a thing from which all reason has consistently taken its leave.

A semblance of order cannot possibly be achieved until the last man is out and the sports-going public returns to something easier on its heart—say a good, bruising football game featuring 99-yard runs and touchdown passes.

Something close to a stroke seized the entire borough of Brooklyn, and Brooklyn fans from Flatbush Avenue to Little America, when the Dodgers played like hammiest amateurs in series history in the first two games.

You could walk anywhere in the borough and scoop up frustration like snow.

And then, out of the completely disorderly third game of the series, came a Dodger victory. The score was 9-8. Eight pitchers were involved, plus 26 hits, a few wild pitches, a juicy error and other chaos.

The Dodgers had led in this one 6-0 and then 7-2 and 9-4 and how they ever squeezed out no one will know, not even lumpy Hugh Casey, the old Navy man, who wandered into the disreputable fray with one out in the seventh and held off further Yankee depradations on the then skimpy Dodger lead.

BUT THE BROOKLYN people accepted all this in stride. It seemed natural to them after watching the Dodgers for so many years. In Brooklyn the fantastic and the unreasonable become routine at Ebbets Field.

However, in the fourth game they burst loose with a demonstration which must have taken years off their collective lives.

Why a number of them didn't drop dead immediately of heart attacks—when Brooklyn won in the ninth, 3-2, on Lavagetto's pinch double—is simply a tribute to the hardiness of the American body.

If you saw that hynotizing demonstration of mob hysteria, you'll never forget it. If you didn't see it . . . well, you wouldn't have believed it anyway.

I thought Lavagetto would be torn to shreds as he tried to fight his way to the Dodger shower room.

He took a fearful beating from his colleagues, and when the fans—cascading out of the stands—hit him like a tidal wave he needed help to keep from being crushed under foot.

COOKIE'S HIT wrung one of the few cheers ever heard from the press box.

Ball writers see so many games, and through the years have so thoroughly schooled themselves to take the dull with the interesting, that it is a rarity when wild-haired partisanship rears its head in our coop.

But when Cookie's long one rattled off the fence, just out of the reach of Tommy Henrich, you would have thought that most of us were related to him and that he had just saved the old homestead with a wave of his checkbook.

Our editors must have wondered, assuming they have the wherewithal for same.

The Yanks and Dodgers of 1947 are probably two of the worst ball clubs ever to get into a series.

It was generally felt in the press box that the 1944 series between the Cardinals and Browns, or the 4-F fantasy as it was called, scraped the bottom of the series barrel. But this current shambles takes the cake.

Of course, there are some crackling good men on the field, but there were never nine of them at the same time, as in a good percentage of previous series played.

THIS IS STRICTLY a battle between two green heavyweights who can swing from the floor but who have only a casual hold on coordination and control.

Hence we see what appear to be hallucinations. The Dodgers win a game with one hit, 3-2, and despite the fact that they committed three errors to the other team's one.

A pitcher, Floyd Bevens, walks 10 men, but has the series first no-hitter snuggling in the palm of his hand when he suddenly loses.

It has been justly said that a rheumatic GAR veteran could steal second base on Yogi Berra, the Yankee catcher, without use of his walking stick.

Yogi keeps pegging to Joe DiMaggio in center instead of his second base combination of Rizzuto and Stirnweiss. On pop flies, he catches mirages.

Ralph Branca has a no-hitter half-way through the first game, and hasn't let a Yankee reach first base. Then DiMag scrapes a hit off the third baseman's glove, and Branca flies to pieces like an A-bomb.

Lavagetto has to plead with Rickey to keep his place on the Dodger team, then becomes a Brooklyn immortal.

You figure it out. Nobody else can, and that goes for the players, managers, coaches and the No. 1 inspiration of the whole affair—Al Schacht.

but it spurred Yale on to complete a savage 68-yard sortie for the Blue's first of two touchdowns.

Ironically, the score was made by Jim Fuchs, a rookie and former Chicago school boy star who replaced Jackson. Big Jim went over from the eleven.

Yale's second touchdown came late in the third quarter with Ferd (The Bull) Nadherny, the Blue's dig siege gun and defensive star all afternoon, climaxing a 79-yard procession by going over from the three on an off tackle smash.

Attesting to the deep rivalry and fierceness of play was the unusual large number of injuries and penalties inflicted on both clubs. Except for Jackson, who may be sidelined indefinitely, none of the other contusions and abrasions was serious.

Princeton Beats Brown on Early Lead

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 4 (AP).—Princeton opened its football season today, scoring three touchdowns in the first 24 minutes against Brown. Then, outplayed for the rest of the game, Charlie Caldwell's Tigers managed to hold off repeated Brown thrusts in the second half and come out on the long end of a 21-7 score before 25,000 in Palmer Stadium.

George Franke intercepted a Finn pass early in the first quarter and a few moments later was over for the first touchdown from the 1-foot mark. Bob Meyer converted as he did the next two Princeton tallies. With the quarter almost over, George Sella, Tiger sophomore, dashed 17 yards for the descending touchdown as it turned out.

Penn Whitewashes Lafayette, 59 to 0

Philadelphia, Oct. 4 (AP).—Fifty-one thousand persons gathered at Franklin Field today and saw just what they expected as the University of Pennsylvania opened its seventy-first football season with a whopping 59-0 lacing of little Lafayette.

The thermometer registered 88 degrees and except for getting a few flashes of nimble running, the 51,283 spectators spent a hot and dull afternoon.

Penn's offenesive comprised simple single-wing power plays, with Fullback Bill Luongo doing the heavy lugging. He capped a five-play 67-yard march by bucking five yards after 3:14 of the first period for the initial 6 points.

Colgate Swamps Merchantmen, 29-0

Great Neck, N. Y., Oct. 4 (AP).—Colgate inaugurated its football season by handing the twice-beaten Kings Point Merchant Marine Academy a 29-0 defeat today at Tomb Memorial Field before some 8000 fans.

The Red-Raiders scored in every period but the third as they launched Paul Bixler's coaching regime on the right foot.

Mercersburg Beats Randolph-Macon, 35-13

Front Royal, Va., Oct. 4.—After two straight wins Randolph-Macon Academy Yellow Jackets found Mercersburg Academy too strong here this afternoon, and lost 25 to 13.

Three of the six touchdowns of the game were made on passes and two other scores were made possible by passes.

YANKS' TURN TO CHEER—It was the Yankees turn to whoop it up yesterday as they beat the Brooklyn Dodgers, 2-1, and took the lead in the World Series. Top, Frank Shea, rookie pitcher who hurled the Yankee victory, is pummeled by his teammates as they leave the field. Inset, Shea and Joe DiMaggio clowning a bit in the dressing room. DiMaggio's homer was the decisive blow sixth-game pitcher, it is assumed that the job will go to Ralph Branca, first-game victim of the Yankees who has since figured in two relief roles.

Cookie Fails as Yanks Win

Ebbets Field was a madhouse in today's ninth inning as Dodger fans envisioned another wild finish that would deliver a victory over the hated Yanks, who held a 2-1 lead. And when Catcher Bruce Edwards opened the last of the ninth with a single to left, the fourth off Shea, the stomping and yelling reached a thunderous pitch.

The Dodgers moved Vic Lombardi, a pitcher who can run, in as a pinch runner for Edwards and Manager Shotton played percentages. He called for a sacrifice by Furillo and Lombardi scampered to second on the bunt that Shea handled for a putout at first.

Enter Lavagetto

There was glumness when little Johnny Jorgensen flied to Henrich for the second out, but the 34,379 were electrified when out of the dugout to bat for Pitcher Hugh Casey came the veteran Lavagetto, presidential timber in Brooklyn. Two previous pinch hitters had been used by the Dodgers earlier in the game, and Lavagetto obviously was being saved for this spot.

There was a consultation by the Yankees on the pitching mound. Coach Charley Dressen looked toward the bull pen, where Relief Specialist Joe Page already was warmed up. Shea talked earnestly with Dressen, who looked to the bench for orders from Bucky Harris. Getting them, he patted Shea on the back and left him in.

Lavagetto took the first pitch, a called strike. And he took the next three, all of them wide. Now the count was 3 and 1, and Shea cut the middle with called strike two. A single would tie the score. That's what Brooklyn wanted. But Lavagetto went down swinging at the 3-and-2 pitch, and the Dodgers went down with him.

Shea raced from the mound on a bee-line, waiting for no congratulations from his Yankee mates. He fairly leaped on his battery mate, Aaron Robinson, before the Yankee catcher could divest himself of mask and protector, and mauled him in a frenzy of happiness. The Yankees streaming in from the field caught up with Shea and back-slapped him all the way to the dugout.

Harris Uses Robinson

Robinson was a new figure in the Yankees' line-up in this series. Manager Bucky Harris, in high disgust at the catching performances of his other receivers, brought Robinson out of the Yankee doghouse to handle the stuff Shea threw. For the first time during the series, the Dodgers didn't attempt to steal a base against the Yankee catching.

One reason was, perhaps, that the Dodgers didn't get a man on base against Shea until two were out in the fourth and Peewee Reese drew a walk. They didn't get their first hit off the Yankee right-hander until Gene Hermanski opened the fifth with a futile single to right.

Rex Barney was the first of four Dodger pitchers to face the Yankees, and they all lacked control until Hugh Casey moved in after seven innings for his third appearance in the series. From Barney, the Yankees received nine bases on balls in the 4 2/3 innings he lasted, only two shy of the series record for a full game, but he held 'em to two runs.

Trouble in a Hurry

Barney was in deep trouble in the opening inning when a walk to Stirnweiss, a two-bagger to center by Henrich and another walk to Lindell filled the bases with none out. With the Brooklyn fans yelling for his removal, he struck out Joe DiMaggio, got rid of George McQuinn on a tap to the box that was turned into a force play at the plate, and then fanned Bill Johnson in a finish with a flourish.

The Yankees were muffing big innings consistently early in the game. Barney walked Henrich and Lindell, with one out in the third, but Joe DiMaggio was no problem. He grounded to Reese for a double play.

Barney's wildness caught up with him in the fourth, though. After fanning Johnson for the second out of the inning, he walked Robinson and Rizzuto. That's when Shea staked himself to a 1-0 lead with a clean-shot single to left that scored Robinson from second. A walk to Stirnweiss filled the bases, but Henrich grounded out.

DiMaggio had revenge in his heart against Barney when he came to bat in the fifth with one out and the bases empty, after striking out and hitting into a double play in his first two appearances. He hit a 3-and-1 pitch and then took off on a home-run jaunt as the ball settled into the upper left-field deck to give the Yanks a 2-0 lead.

When Barney walked Johnson a bit later, Southpaw Joe Hatten took over and got rid of Robinson for the third out, and held the Yanks hitless in the sixth.

Dodgers Score in Sixth

On only one hit, the Dodgers got a run in the sixth and got into the ball game. Pinch Hitter Al Gionfriddo drew a walk from Shea after Stanky fanned. Reese also walked. Jackie Robinson got the run home with a single over second base, Reese moved to third and Robinson took second on DiMaggio's throw to Johnson.

With only one out and runners on third and second, the Dodgers were in a grand spot to tie the score as Brooklyn favorite Dixie Walker strode to the plate. Page was warming up for the Yanks but Shea was unperturbed. He got rid of Walker on a foul pop to Johnson and he got rid of Hermanski on a fly to DiMag.

The Yankees threatened to bolster their 2-1 lead in the seventh when Henrich's single, a walk to DiMag and a passed ball put men on second and third with only one out. But Hank Behrman fanned George McQuinn and threw out Johnson personally.

The closest the Dodgers came to getting the tying run was in the seventh after Shea walked Edwards to open the inning. He bore down to Furillo and Jorgensen on outfield flies, but Pinch Hitter Arky Vaughan batted for Behrman and rapped the rightfield wall for a double that moved Edwards to third. Shea walked Pinch Hitter Pete Reiser to fill the bases, and then all Brooklyn was saddened when Peewee Reese took a third strike with his bat on his shoulder.

Syracuse Bows After Scoring First

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 4 (AP).—The Dartmouth Indians threw a lot of weight around today as they notched a 28-7 triumph over Syracuse, each of their four touchdowns being scored by a 200-pound pigskin toter.

Syracuse managed to put a six-pointer across in the first period, but it was Dartmouth the rest of the way.

A crowd of 18,000 witnessed the contest played under a warm sun.

Big gun in the Dartmouth bombardment was Francis O'Brien of Philadelphia, 202-pound fullback, who accounted for two touchdowns. He scored a second-period touchdown on a line buck from inside the one-yard marker, and needled his way through the Syracuse team for 63 yards and a score in the final period.

Dartmouth's first touchdown, which came shortly after the start of the second period, was scored by 204-pound Herb Carey, starting fullback. Like O'Brien, he outdistanced the field as he ran 70 yards for a marker.

Army Stops Big Colorado Eleven, 47-0

West Point, N. Y., Oct. 4 (AP).—Coach Earl Blain and his Army football team staged an experimental Saturday at the expense of a big but lumbering University of Colorado squad today, entertaining a crowd of 21,000 by rolling up a 47 to 0 score.

Blaik sent a total of 46 players into the game, including 18 backs. Most of them gained ground through and over the bulky Colorado line, which was able to stop the Cadets only once.

fullback, was the only Cadet to score twice. He did it in the first quarter, when the Buffaloes still were putting up strong resistance, on a long pass from Bill Gustafson. He repeated in the fourth on a 12-yard end run.

Other touchdowns were made by Amos Gillette, Bert Aton, Bobby Stuart, Winfield Scott and Karl Kuckhahn. Jack Mackmull converted five times in seven attempts.

Gustafson, the first-string quarterback in the "T" formation, was used sparingly and Arnold Galiffa was given a strenuous workout at that position. August Dielens and Charley Gabriel were used at both quarter and halfback.

Harvard Trips Boston U., 19-14

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 4 (AP).—Superior backfield talent enabled Harvard's powerful football forces to pass their first match test by outbattling Boston University's ambitious Terriers, 19-14, today before a 33,000 crowd at the stadium.

Blessed with the finest collection of ball-carriers in many years, the Crimson pulled out its hard-earned triumph with a 31-yard placement field goal by Emil Drvaric late in the third period and then insured it late in the finale when Chet Pierce, star Negro tackle, nailed the speedy Larry Kirkman in the B. Wildcats Edge UCLA, 27 to 26; Michigan Drubs Stanford

4th Quarter Score by Sub Nips Uclans

Evanston, Ill., Oct. 4 (AP).—A fourth-string halfback, Speedy Jules Siegle, grabbed a 33-yard touchdown pass in the fourth period to hand inspired Northwestern a sizzling 27 to 26 win over heavily-favored UCLA before 44,000 at Wyche Stadium today.

The actual victory margin was provided by Quarterback Jim Farrar's point-after-touchdown, but Siegle—in his first and only play of the game—broke the back of the heralded Uclans with his pay-off snatch from Farrar midway in the e losing period with Northwetsern behind 26 to 20.

The Uclans blew a 13-0 lead in the second period and were demoralized by two sensational Northwestern touchdown runs in the third period—a 93-yard kick-off return by Frankie Aschenbrenner and a 66-yard punt return by Tom Worthington.

Worthington, a second string halfback, paced Northwestern with two touchdowns, also counting on a 16-yard pass from Quarterback Don Bursonfor the first Wildcat score in the second period.

-erehen Northwestern outgained UCLA in first downs, 13 to 11, cashing in mainly on 12 completions in 23 forward passes for 132 yards. The UCLANS wasted a ground attack which outstripped the Wildcats, 205 to 153.

Subsc Fail to Hold

The scoring merry-go-round started wit hall the earmarks of an easy USLA triumph as the UCLANS cruised 59 yards and 51 yards for a 13-0 lead in the second period. Jack Myers climaxed the first drive with a smash over from inches out and the second score came on a 15-yard pass from Carl Benton to Johnny Roesch.

But UCLA erred by rushing in substitutes after its second touchdown and Northwestern ranged to its first score of the season when Burson flipped a 16-yard payoff pass to Worthington, capping a 37-yard sally.

Wildcats Go Wild

Then came the thrilling kick returns for touchdowns by Aschen-Brenner and Worthingto nto give Northwestern a 20-13 lead in the third period.

UCLA flared back for two more touchdowns in the same period on punting miscues by Ascenbrenner. The first came when Chuck Page, goose-stepped 3 yards around end into pay dirt. End Tom Fears then blocked an Aschenbrenner punt on Northwestern's 450, scooped up the bounding ball on the 15 and ran across for a touchdown. Reiges' second conversion gave UCLA a 26-20 lead.

Then came Northwestern's game-deciding pass in the fourth period.

'Keep Boudreau' Fans' Reaction; Lures Veeck Home

Cleveland. Oct. 4 (AP).—Cleveland Indians' President Bill Veeck today planned a quick trip back from the World Series to sample fan reaction before proceeding with any plans to dispose of Manager-Shortstop Lou Boudreau.

"The Cleveland fans there have given us two great years. We can't settle this Boudreau matter without considering their reaction. I'll fly back late today," Veeck said.

The Tribe head man intimated a projected deal that would have sent Boudreau to the St. Louis Browns for Vernon Stephens and two other players had fallen through.

"But that doesn't mean he might not be traded some time in the future," he said.

Newspapers here carried front page stories today reflecting fan reaction to the proposed disposal of Boudreau, and virtually all of them felt this way: "Keep Boudreau."

Wisconsin Ties Indiana, 7-7 On Maves' 70-Yard Scamper

Bloomington, Ind., Oct. 4 (AP).—Earl Maves of Wisconsin scooted 70 yards today to get a 7-to-7 tie with Indiana which played in Wisconsin's territory most of the game.

The squat senior broke through the center when the Badger fortunes were low in the last period and not a Hoosier laid a hond on him as he raced to the goal line 70 yards back.

George Taliaferro, Indiana's brilliant sophomore, led his team on a series of sustained drives but only one paid off, in the third. He crossed up the Badgers after a series of line plays and passed to End Lou Mihaljovich in the end zone.

The Gary Negro repeatedly brought the record homecoming crowd of 30,000 to its feet with his hard running, which netted as much as 27 yards on one play.

Indiana gained a net total of 404 yards, compared with 174 for the Badgers.

Harrison Takes Reading Open Lead With 209

By Charles Welsh

Reading, Pa., Oct. 4 (AP).—E. J. (Dutch) Harrison, lanky, drawling pro from York, Pa., took the leadership of the $10,000 Reading Open golf tournament today with 209 strokes at the end of 54 holes.

Playing against Jimmy Demaret, leader in the first two rounds, Harrison holed out a 12-footer on the final green for a 68 card that was six strokes better than Demaret's 74. And with three others from the leading group shooting sub-par scores, the laughing man from Ojai, Calif., skidded to a 212 tie for fifth place.

Pressing Harrison for the leadership were three sharpshooters with 211 strokes. Bobby Locke, Johannesburg, South Africa, shot 70 today, as did Ed (Porky) Oliver from Wilmington, Del., and Terl Johnson, Norristown, Pa., carded 69 to stay in the thick of the fight.

Demaret, Stranahan Tied

Demaret's 212 total deadlocked him with Amateur Frank Stranahan, Toledo, Ohio, who shot 1-over-par 72 for the 6397-yard Berkshire Country Club course. A stroke further back were three tournament veterans, Ellsworth Vines, Los Angeles; Chick Harbert, Northville, Mich., and Herman Barron, White Plains, N. Y. Vines turned in his best round, a 69, and the steady Barron had par totals on each nine, while Harbert, in secon dplace at the end of two rounds, also slipped to 74.

Altogether, eight players of the field of 68 managed to better par 71—double the number yesterday. Harrison and Skip Alexander, Lexington, N. C., were best with 68s, with Alexander landing in a tie with George Payton, Hampton, Va., at 215.

Worsham Has a 78

Johnson and Vines were the only 69-shooters, but the 70 list showed Locke, Oliver, and another Wilmington sharpshooter, Dave Douglas, and Philadelphia's Joseph (Bud) Lewis.

But other scores soared as high as 82, and some of the big names were as much as 15 and 16 strokes off the pace. Amateur Dick Chapman, Mamaroneck, N. Y., had a 75 for 223; Open Champ Lew Worsham of Washington, D. C., skyrocketed all the way to 78 for a 224, the same total as George Schoux, Mamaroneck, N. Y., who carded 74. A stroke farther back, the 225 group included Vic Ghezzi, Kansas City, Kans., who struggled to a 76.

4th Period Rally Wins For Randolph-Macon

Ashland, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—In a thrill-packed fourth quarter Randolph-Macon College's Yellow Jackets came from behind, scoring three touchdowns, to win over Johns Hopkins University, 23 to 18 here today.

Ken Holloway, Yellow Jacket halfback, and Arthur Oley were the outstanding players for Randolph-Macon. Holloway intercepted a Blue Jay pass on the Randolph-Macon 5 and ran 95 yards for a touchdown. He was aided on the 30-yard by a beautiful block by Milton Drewery, Yellow Jacket fullback.

Stuyvesant Victor Over St. James, 20-0

Fullback Walter McClanahan scored twice on two short line plunges o tlead Stuvyesant to a 20-0 triumph over St. James of Hagerstown, in a football game played at Warrenton, Va .yesterday.

McClanahan's first score came after Benny Marshall recovered a St. James fumble on the latter's five, and the second was set up by Johnny Copp who raced 28 yards around end to the loser's three-yard line. Dale Tyrrell kicked both extra points.

Cougars Whip Idaho

Moscow, Idaho, Oct. 4 (AP).—The Washington State Cougars marched 53 yards for a second period touchdown today to defeat the Idaho Vandals, 7 to 0, before a record crowd of 22,500 football fans.

The Williams brothers, Jerry of Washington State, who scored the game's only touchdown on a 6-yard run, and Bill of Idaho led the offensive thrusts of the day although most of Billy's passes fell incomplete and he was forced to turn to his running game.

The touchdown came in the second period with Bobby McGuire, Dean Eggers and Williams leading the drive.

Wolverines Bury Indians By 49 to 13

Ann Arbor, Mich., Oct. 4 (AP).—Grinding out four rapid-fire touchdowns in the first 8½ minutes of play, Michigan's power-loaded Wolverines piled up a 42-0 half time lead today and went ahead to paste Stanford's outmanned Indians 49 to 13, before 66,100 fans in their first football meeting in 45 years.

Stanford, playing without two of its best running backs, Halfbacks George Quist and Bob Anderson, fell hopelessly behind at the outset as Michigan threw greased lightning at the Cardinals for quick touchdowns each of the first four times it got possession of the ball.

On the second play after the opening kickoff, Bob Chappuis, talented Toledo, Ohio, halfback, heaved a 59-yard pass to end Bob Mann back of the Stanford secondary for a touchdown that was hardly a hint of what was to come.

Michigan's place kicking specialist, Jim Brieske, converted after all four of the first-period touchdowns and went ahead to a perfect day of seven out of seven.

Stanford Rally Fails

Gene Derricotte, veteran Wolverine left half from Defiance, Ohio, picked up two more Michigan touchdowns on one-yard dives, climaxing second-period thrusts after Derricotte's 27-yard pitch to end Ed McNeill had set up one of the scores and J. T. White's interception of one of Al Morris' passes had led to the other.

Stanford, which had penetrated into Michigan territory only one time in the first half—to the Wolverine 39—came back to win the second half from Wolverine shock troops, two touchdowns to one, but it was much too late.

Colts Tackle 49ers Today

Baltimore, Oct. 4 (AP).—The Baltimore Colts stack their rugged defense against offensive-minded San Francisco in a return All-America Professional Football Conference contest here tomorrow (2:15 o'clock EST).

The Colts grudgingly gave up a 14-7 decision to the 49ers out on the Coast a couple of weeks ago. Frankie Sinkwich, the former Georgia University fireball, will be on hand to help put a giddy-ap in the Colt offense.

Sinkwich, obtained two days ago from the New York Yankees who put him on the voluntarily retired list, will be ready to go before a crowd that is expected to top 40,000.

Illinois Strikes Fast, Crushes Iowa, 35-12

Spartans Nose Out Mississippi State

By Robert E. Voges

East Lansing, Mich., Oct. 4 (AP). Michigan State bounced back from a crushing 55-0 defeat by Michigan last week to squeak out a 7-0 win over Mississippi State today before 22,562 partisan fans.

Although most of the game was played in Spartan territory, the State men managed to beat off successive scoring threats and grounded the passing attack that was expected to give the favored Maroons the victory.

Late in the third quarter Michigan State took over on its own 46 after an exchange of punts. Bob Krestel, a third-string quarterback, tossed to Ken Balge on the Maroon 41 for a first down and two plays later Krestel connected to join Gilman for a first down on the 23.

After a line buck and an incomplete pass Krestel flipped a short pass cross the line to Warren Huey who went over standing up for the game's only touchdown. George E. Smith converted the extra point.

The Maroons dominated the play in the statistics, gaining 13 first downs to three for Michigan State and collecting 185 yards through rushing and 59 through passes against 78 yards rushing and 43 yards on forwards for the Spartans.

But Michigan State bottled up the visitors' passing attack. Mississippi State completed only four of 19 tosses.

Mississippi State's biggest scoring threat came in the second period when it intercepted a pass on the enemy. The visitors' attack carried them to the winners' five-yard line. After two rushing plays were stopped for losses, Matulich tossed two passes but both were grounded.

Navy Plebes Bow, 50-9

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 4 (AP).—Kentucky Freshmen crushed the Navy's Plebe football team, 50 to 9, today in a contest which appeared even in the first quarter, but turned into an utter rout of the Middies from there on.

Big 9 Champions Start Title Defense

Iowa City, Iowa, Oct. 4 (AP).—You can count Illinois in on the battle for the 1947 Western conference football championship, too.

The Illini, although minus several of the stars who led Illinois to the 1946 title and a Rose Bowl triumph, showed a tremendous running and passing game today as they opened their 1947 bid with a 35 to 12 victory over Iowa before a crowd of 52,294 today.

Illinois struck fast in the first period. Sam Zatkoff, Illini end, pumped on Em Tunnell's fumble on the Iowa 17-yard line and big Russ Steger capped a touchdown drive with a plunge from the one-yard line. Don Maaechtle place-kicked the first of his five extra points.

Zatkoff Blocks Punt

A few moments later Zatkoff blocked Bob Smith's punt and Illinois had the ball on the Iowa 36. Perry Moss, who completed 11 of 16 passes for 116 yards, tossed three straight aerials and the Illini were on the six. Dwight Edleman went over from the two.

Iowa scored early in the second as Ron Headlington drove across from th eone after a pass interference had given the Hawks the ball at that spot. Headington's kick was no good.

But the stubborn Illinois bounced right back for a third touchdwon when Moss went over from the one after a long Illini march.

Iowa Goes 77 Yards

Iowa, at the start of the third period, went 77 yards to score. Al Dimarco climaxed the advance with a toss from the nine to end Jack Kelso in the end znoe. Headington again missed the extra point and Illinois led 21 ot 12.

Purdue Downs Ohio State In See-Saw Battle, 24-20

Lafayette, Ind., Oct. 4 (AP).—Purdue University's Boilermakers, losing the lead three times, hammered back to defeat Ohio State's Buckeyes, 24 to 20, today.

The 34,000 fans were repaid for a pregame drenching by a gridiron foot race that made 50-yard line boxes the poorest seats in Ross-Ade Stadium.

It was Purdue's first Western Conference in two seasons and the first for Coach Stewart K. (Stu) Holcomb, former Army line coach and one-time teammate of Ohio State's Coach Wesley Fesler.

Only two breakaway sprints by Halfback Dave Sensanbaugher—one a 97-yard kickoff return—enabled Ohio State to make it a close game. Purdue turned loose a ground attack, something it wasn't supposed to have this year, that did most of the damage.

Demoss, of Purdue, injured in the second quarter, came back wearing the harness that protected his trick left shoulder most of last season. Sensanbaugher broke loose again down the left margin for a 62-yard touchdown run, but Purdue hit back in short order.

Purdue's other completed pass, a 15-yarder from Demoss to Ned Maloney, figured in a 79-yard march culminated by Adams' plunge from the 1-foot line. Haverstock booted the extra point.

Ohio State busted back at the start of the final quarter and sub Halfback Alex Verdova swept wide around his left end from Purdue's 10. Fullback Ollie Cline had contributed a 24-yard run to the attack.

Sub Halfback Dick Bushnell started Purdue's winning drive with a 46-yard sprint to Ohio State's 25. Szulborski carried the ball to the 10, Bushnell went to the 5 and Adams advanced to within 6 inches of the double stripe. Demoss went over on a quarerback sneak, Haverstock split the uprights again and that was the ball game.

Minnesota Turns Back Nebraska

Lincoln, Nebr., Oct. 4 (AP).—Minnesota handled Nebraska mercilessly in the first half and the fourth period today to crush the Huskers 28 to 13 in a Big Nine-Big Six inter-conference game before 36,000.

Playing with the temperature in the high 80's, the Minnesota team marched 68 yards from the opening kickoff for their first touchdown, with Billy Bye going over from the two. In the second period Minnesota got another when two pass plays covered 56 yards. A 17-yard toss to Bill Thiele paid off.

Nebraska came to life in the third period and scored on two Del Wiegand to End Ralph Damkroger passes for 18 and 7 yards.

The Huskers scored again after Tackle Gene Sims recovered a blocked punt on the Minnesota 19. A 14-yard pass, Wiegand to Damkroger, was good for a touchdown.

Then Minnesota turned on the heat. Halfback Ev Faunce went to the Minnesota 47 with the kick-off. The Gophers slammed and passed down to the Nebraska one-foot line for first down. Then the teams swapped five yard penalties before Quarterback Jim Maloski sneaked over. Back Don Johnson got the last score on a short smash after a pass interception broke up Nebraska's last threat.

Squeegees are secondary brakes:—the brake pedal action stops the brake drum, which stops the wheel—but the Squeegee Action-Traction tread stops the car—every time—on wet or dry roads.
The narrow ribs of rubber on Squeegees give more stopping power than any other tread. On wet roads, the Squeegee tread sweeps the water ahead . . . cleans a dry track for a quick, straight stop.
No other tire can give Action-Traction, because the Squeegee tread is patented and exclusive with General.

Patuxent Naval Eleven Wins, 26-0

Patuxent Naval Air Station scored an easy 26-0 victory over the Washington Navy Receiving Station 11 at the victor's field yesterday.

Halfback Bob Ciesley ran nine yards for one score, passed for another and added two extra points. Patuxent gained two more touchdowns when Ed Gabana plunged over the 2 and Ed Patrick raced 40 yards to a score after intercepting an NRS pass.

Dr. Almac Runnerup; Task Third

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Laurel, Md., Oct. 4.—The Bomar recent Arlington Futurity, gave Maryland racegoers—some 9276 of them—a peek at his brand of speed this afternoon in capturing the Richard Johnson feature at Laurel.

The son of Grand Slam and Valdina Lark coasted into the wire a length in front of Mrs. J. V. Stewart's Dr. Almac, with the King Ranch's Task, the favorite, third. Only five started in the 6-furlong sprint for juveniles and the miniature field resulted in a slight "minus pool" in the show betting.

With Task installed the favorite, Piet paid a healthy $9.20 mutuel. The Detroit-owned colt was clocked in 1.12 1-5, only one fraction under the record for the race shared by Very Snooty (1942) and Repand (1946).

It was the second triumph in the some stable for the Bomar Stable, which had the winner, Billy Bumps, in 1945.

Jockey Red Howell rode Piet and had the colt in full stride quickly after he appeared to hesitate leaving the gate. Dr. Almac also missed footing slightly directly after getting out of the gate.

Piet opened a long lead and saved ground, while Dr. Almac was being rated by Jockey Charlie Wahler. In the final drive, Wahler roused Dr. Almac, but the move was too late and Howell coasted Piet into the wire. Task was a beaten-off third.

The victory for Piet was his third of the year in nine starts and the $8440 he picked up today sent his earnings for the year to a shade under $80,000, most of that amassed by his great Futurity.

Daily Double Pays $29.60

The daily double continued to pay an ordinary amount when $29.60 was posted on the 7 and 1 combination. Jockey Mike Basile took M. Newmyer's Stanley to the front early in the first race and the 4-year-old colt jogged to the wire in the role of a $4.80 favorite.

The second race was a photo finish thriller of the first water. Mrs. V. D. Waple's Tumble Boy, L. G. Le Faivre, jr.'s, Hadawin and J. Scholzi's Insider, the latter a 100-1 shot, hit the wire as a team and the camera separated them in the above order. Tumble Boy, with Jockey Carson Kirk up, paid $12.

The fans gave apprentice Leon Buttler a booing after the second race. He was aboard the Ridge View Farm's Even Star and had a three-length lead when the three-year-old filly ran almost to the outside fence, dropping out of the money and paving the way for a $4.60 victory of Mrs. D. P. Barrett's Reflex Arc with Jockey Johnny Tammaro up.

Episcopal In 44-6 Romp

Paced by Quarterback Rufe Barkley, Episcopal High of Alexandria rolled over Fishburne Military Academy, 44-6, before 1600 spectators yesterday on Episcopal Field.

Barkley passed for one touchdown, ran for another and set up three other scores with long passes.

Chris Holland tallied twice for Episcopal and Phil Duckett, Bud Dunn, Burwell Manning, Bailey Dixon and Barkley each scored once. Ben Moore booted two extra points for the winners.

The victory was Episcopal's second straight.

'Whistling Willie' Roache Meets Jones Tomorrow Night

Herbie (Biff) Jones, hoping to bounce back into the victory column after losing to Johnny Bratton a few weeks ago, meets the veteran likghtweight, "Whistling" Willie" Roache in the 10-round feature tomorrow night at Turner's Arena.

Jones has been promised a return match with Bratton in the Chicago Stadium, so a good performance against Roache is mandatory for the Biffer.

In Roache, Jones will meet a ringwise campaigner who has met such standouts as Ike Williams, Sal Bartola and Willie Pep and has knocke dout Ham Wiloby and Jimmie Collins.

Jones, in turn, has quite a punch himself. Herbie kayoed Lew Hanbury in three and Johnny Nichols in one before his only 1947 defeat at the hands of Bratton.

In five-round preliminaries, Frank Sweeney meets Jesse James, Sonny Boy Bunn faces Flat Top Cummgings and Philarelphia Ralph Burnley boxes Buster Smith. Angelo Marini and Ed Harris clash in a four.

Roosevelt's Rough Riders Beaten, 13-0

Atlantic City, N. J., Oct. 4.—The Rough Riders of Roosevelt high of Washington, D. C., ran into a stone wall today as the Atlantic City high school football team scored a 13-0 victory before 3,000 persons.

Vince Pugliese, Roosevelt's fullback and outstanding back, was hurt midway in the fourth quarter and carried from the field.

The local high school scored from the one-yard line in the second period but failed to convert the extra point. After a poor punt by Bernie Mead in the third quarter, Atlantic City ran the ball back to the Rough Riders' 17 from where Lou Coger scored on a run through his right guard.

Roosevelt unsuccessfully sought to gain ground by passing each time it had the ball in the fourth quarter.

Fort Belvoir Routs Navy Quarters

Fort Belvoir, Va., Oct. 4.—Fort Belvoir swamped Navy Quarters "I," 41-0, here yesterday.

Halfback George Evans led the Belvoir attack with two touchdowns on a 30-yard end run and a 6-yard line buck. Jim Barrick, Lientjan and John McDaniel also scored 6-pointers.

Jim Saunders kicked all five extra points from placement.

Bill Veeck, Wife Sued For $260,000 Damages

Tucson, Ariz., Oct. 4 (AP).—Bill Veeck, president of the Cleveland Indians baseball club, and his wife, Eleanor, today were sued for a total of $260,000 in damages in two suits filed in the Pima County Superior Court here.

The suits arose from an automobile accident September 18 in which a station wagon driven by Veeck was involved in a smash with an automobile in which three sisters were riding.

Falls Church Wins, 38-0, Over Luray

Carl Shore, who ran for one touchdown and passed for two others, paced Falls Church to a 38-0 victory over Luray yesterday at Falls Church.

Other touchdowns were scored by Dick Thompson, who crossed the line twice, Roger Cole, Johnny Wagner and Bob Clodd. Bud Hilemann kicked two extra points.

Rutgers Downs Cats

New Brunswick, N. J., Oct. 4.—Rutgers University set down the visiting Red Cats of Western Reserve, 21 to 6, today for the Scarlet's first victory of the year as it inaugurated relations with the Cats and its home season here this afternoon.

D. C. Soldiers Win

The Military District of Washington football team routed Edgewood Arsenal, 50-6, in a Middle Eastern Service Command contest yesterday on the Fort Myer field.

Joe Judge Recalls 'Glorious Day'

A Mellow Ty Cobb Now Loves Old Gang, Pays Dinner Check

You couldn't blame the fellow if he developed a sudden, uncontrolable hitch in his voice. And his eyes had that unmistakable gleam that comes only when they've seen something wonderful.

You couldn't blame Joe Judge because the old firehorse had seen something wonderful, "something glorious," as he put it.

He had just returned from New York where a day previous he had relived in a few fleeting moments, some of the thrills that he had experienced in his many years as a major leaguer. He was one of the more than 40 old-timers who were guests of the Yankees and played a two-inning ball game against the Yankee 'Old-timers.'

Joe Judge was like a kid who had seen a magic trick at a circus. He smiled, clasping his hands in front of him as he recounted that "glorious" day.

"Wonderful, gosh what a feeling! There was the Babe, Cobb, Speaker, Schang, Meusel, Combs, Home-run Baker, Red Faber, Chief Bender, Waite Hoyt—all the gang—the Babe didn't play and when he tried to speak and just couldn't make it, it sort of tugged at the old heart strings.

"And there was Cobb, fat and balding. But still the same old Ty, as full of the devil and fight in a uniform as he was in his playing days.

"He laid down a perfect bunt, then legged it to first as best he could. And when he was called out on a close play, you saw the old fight in him as he looked angrily around and challenged the decision. That was the Ty we knew when we played against him.

"But it was a different Ty off the field. He was mellowing. He put his arm around me and there were tears in his eyes when he said, 'Joe, you and the rest of the gang hated my guts when we were playing, but let's forget it now. Just being with the gang again has done something to me I can't describe.'

"But he didn't have to, because we all felt the same way. And later on that evening, Cobb, who was a pinch-penny if one ever lived, treated us to a sumptuous dinner and an evening we'll never forget. And he kept saying, 'No one but old Ty will pay for this because it's so great seeing all of you guys again.'

"We had Speaker, Hooper and Lewis in our outfield and when Coombs blasted one over Old Spoke's head in the second inning, you knew the clock had been turned back. Speaker, playing the shallow center field he always did, looked up for a second and was off. And as his back was turned and he raced for the ball, honest, he looked just as nimble as he did 30 years ago.

"Those were just a few of the moments that made the day glorious, for all of us. See what I mean?" MORRIS SIEGEL.

Citation Wins Futurity at Belmont Park

Belmont Park, N. Y., Oct. 4 (AP).—Warren Wright's Citation, latest of the Calumet colts to bid for a championship, today won the famed Futurity like a future Whirlaway or Armed—and his filly partner, Bewitch was third.

Spitting the pair was William Woodward's Whirlaway colt, Whirling Fox, which trailed Citation by three lengths while barely heading Bewitch for the place.

Robert J. Kleberg's Better Self was fourth, another length and a half away, in the field of 14 blue-blooded juveniles stepping a straight six and a half furlongs.

This fifty-eighth futurity grossed $106,030 and netted the Victor $78,430. Whirling Fox earned $11,600 and Bewitch, $6800. Better Self drew down $2000.

The Calumet entry ruled favorite at $3.70 for two. They paid $2.40 for place and more for show—$2.90. Citation was teletimed in a swift 1:15 4-5 with Al Snider in the saddle.

Calumet Farm's already unprecedented earnings for a stable in one season zoomed to $1,239,021, including today's $85,230 Futurity gleanings.

Citation, whose record now stands at seven wins in eight tries—his lone loss was behind Bewitch in the Washington Park Futurity—has earned $119,005, the homebred bay son of Bull Lea jumping into the 100-G class. It was his second stakes triumph, he having captured the elementary stakes at Washington Park.

Eastern 90-Pounders Down Trinidad, 7-6

Eastern Branch edged Trinidad 7-6 in a 90-pound Boys Club of Washington Football League contest yesterday on the Armory Field.

In other games, Eastern's 105-pounders downed Merrick, 32-0; the Merrick 120-pounders defeated Eastern, 18-0, and the Eastern 140-pound team drubbed Merrick, 33-13.

Navy Loses To Columbia By 13 to 6

played two previous years together for Lou Little could advance the ball only 3½ yards and had to yield it.

Baysinger Punts 78 Yards

Reaves Baysinger's ensuing punt might well be one of the longest of the year. He stood just inside the end zone extension and his long end-over-end kick bounded past Safetyman Kusserow as if it were jet propelled. Kusserow being downed on his 22, for a net kick of 78 yards.

Having to punt for the first time, in the second quarter, Russell got off a high spiral that, for the only time, failed to go out of bounds and instead perversely sprang back 10 yards in Navy's favor.

Those yards turned out to be a big help.

With Navy showing a yen for running to the right, Columbia's shallow 3-2 second and third lines of defense moved a step in that direction. The result was that speedy Hawkins, swinging out around his own left end, was able to cross the goal line in the corner. Kusserow was gaining but was a few yards too far back.

Columbia came right back to tie it up. Kusserow brought back the kickoff to the Columbia 36, Olsen and Nork ran the tackles to the Navy 41, then Kusserow faked a run to the right and threw a wobbly pass to Swiacki, 6-foot 2-inch end.

When the ball descended three yards from the goal, this giant and Bob Schwoefferman, a 5-foot 11-inch lad, were under it. The taller man won. Two plays later Kusserow scored on a handoff from Rossides. Yablonski missed the kick, as had Hawkins, and the score was 6-6 at the half.

The issue was decided early in the third quarter, and Russell's kicking did it.

Standing at midfield, with Navy's fine big ends rushing at him, he kicked a high spiral that landed on the sideline at the six. Baysinger made a fine return punt from the end zone, but alert Columbia cashed in on a decisive break at this point.

Pass Play Decides

Kusserow first tried to make a running catch of this punt at midfield. But Dick Shimshak, big Navy tackle, hit him so hard as he was catching it that he dropped the ball. But it was a Columbia man, Gene Shekitka, instead of a Navy man, who recovered the fumble at Navy's 40. Two plays later Columbia had the winning score.

It came on a familiar play, with Kusserow running to his right, then throwing a long pass diagonally to his left. This time Bruce Gehrke, Columbia left end, had loafed two full seconds, then had sped into the clear. He was 10 yards from Bill Earl, defender of that sector, when he made the catch nine yards from the goal, and merely trotted over.

Navy, frustrated as it was by inability to complete passes or get any runner through the line, nevertheless had one shot left and almost scored again.

Stopped 3½ Yards Away

As the third quarter ended, Navy got out of its own sector when a Columbia tackle's lunge carried him into a Navy punter and Columbia was penalized for roughing the kicker.

With this help, Navy sprang Hawkins loose around his own left end to Columbia's 28, and a basketball pass from Baysinger to Schwoefferman broke the latter free to Columbia's 10.

Hawkins then got to the 4 through his right tackle, but Earl and Schwoefferman could advance it a net of only a half yard in three tries.

Then Russell kicked to Navy's 45, and after that the rest of the game consisted of Navy failing to make first downs and Russell planting the ball inside the 5.

Kusserow Fools Navy

Navy, which lost 14 to 7 to California at Berkeley a week ago, looked weary from the beginning today.

The first time Columbia got the ball, Navy learned that you can't trust Kusserow. First he ran far to the right and threw a long pass to Gehrke on Navy's 33, then he ran to the right on an identical play but cut for 15 yards down the side line.

Then he ran far to the right and passed straight down the sideline to Swiacki for 8. An interception by Schwoefferman in the end zone broke up that drive, but it illustrated the trouble Navy was having all day trying to figure out what was coming. This uncertainty paid off on the winning pass to Gehrke, on a play when everybody thought Kusserow was going to keep on running but didn't.

Navy's line and backfield both looked good at times, but rarely the same time. Fine Columbia pass defense, resulting in five interceptions at critical times, broke up Navy's hopes of drives.

And on the might-have-been tying touchdown in the fourth quarter, Navy tried a couple of "fooler" plays involving Schwoefferman as a decoy but, as Coach Tom Hamilton of Navy honestly pointed out afterward, Columbia was just too smart to be fooled.

Trojans Go 81 Yards for Late Score

Los Angeles, Oct. 4 (AP).—The Rice Owls of the Southwest Conference and Southern California of the Pacific Coast waged furious grid combat for four quarters today nad both were lucky to leave the field with a 7-7 tie in the first meeting of the two schools.

A sun-baked crowd of 64,231 saw the big Blue and Grey eleven from Texas outplayed in the first half, come back in the third quarter to score seven points.

The Vaunted Trojans traveled 81 yards in 13 plays to tie the count as the clock ticked into the final two minutes of the contest.

Miscues Cost Trojans

Costly miscues robbed the Trojans of scoring chances in the first half as they outran the owls, 152 yards to 69, and racked up six first downs to two for the visitors.

Rice came back strong after half time. Huey Keeney, Owl halfback, outpunted the Troys and put them in a hole early in the third period. Then Quarterback Ike Eikenberg ran and passed the outfit 38 yards in 12 plays for the score, going over on a sneak himself for the tally. Jimmy Williams booted the extra point.

The Owls seemed headed for another touchdown, but Halfback Gordon Gray intercepted one of Ike's passes and returned it 17 yards to the Trojan 34 to end the threat.

Late in the fourth quarter Rice got deep into Trojan territory but had to punt.

Coast Team on March

From his own 19, Sophomore Quarterback Jim Powers, with Jack Kirby and Gray lending the most help, put together a final sustained drive that carried on across the midfield stripe. From there Gray ran 29 yards.

Kirby smacked the middle of the line for 9, and the Trojans pounded down to the one, from where Fullback Verl Lillywhite crashed over. Tom Walker converted, the score was tied and the game ended a moment later.

USC earned 203 yards on the ground against a tough Owl line, and surrendered 163 to Oather Pugh, Huey Keeney, George Walmsley and mates, while the total air and ground gains were 222 for Rice and 291 for the Troys.

USC fumbled three times—once on the Owl three-yard line.

St. Peter's Has Largest Score

St. Peter's ran up the biggest score of the day as the Catholic Youth Association Junior Football League got under way yesterday with six games on two fields.

St. Peter's defeated Holy Trinity, 28-7; Our Lady of Lourdes downed St. Anne's, 25-6, and St. Francis De Sales won from St. Teresa, 20-6 in games on the Ellipse.

In the other three contests at Priority School, St. Martin's drubbed St. Anthony's, 26-0; St. Jerome's and St. Joseph's Home tied, 7-7and Holy Comforter edged Nativity, 7-0.

Willie Herbert Wins Net Title

Mrs. Willie Herbert won the Northern Virginia Open Tennis Tournament women's crown by defeating Elinor Shaw, 7—6, 6—4, yesterday on the Buckingham tennis courts, Alexandria.

Mrs. Allie Freed of Buckingham presented the Allie Freed Trophies to Mrs. Hetrbert and the winners in each divisgion. Men's singles went to Jom Thackara, men's double sto Don Leavens and Dave Johnson mixed double sto Mr. and Mrs. Alphonso Smith.

Utah State Converts Fumbles Into 26-13 Win

Fort Collins, Colo., Oct. 4 (AP).—Utah State's Farmers, the Big Seven title favorites, turned four Colorado A. and M. College fumbles into touchdowns today to make their conference football debut with a 26-12 victory.

With the score deadlocked 13-13 in the final frame, Frank Nelson pounced on a Ram fumble on Utah State's 44. John, Caputo passed to Jay Van Noy, who beat it all the way to the Rams' 12, and on the second play Evan Sorenson rambled six yards for the winning touchdown.

Odds Go Up on Yanks

St. Louis, Oct. 4 (AP).—Betting Commissioner James J. Carroll set the Yankees as 1 to 2 favorites to take their fourth and last victory in the World Series tomorrow with Allie Reynolds on the mound.

Odds of 8 to 5 are carried on the Dodgers if Vic Lombardi hurls at Yankee Stadium.

OFF THE GROUND—Bruce Gehrke, Columbia end, is stopped before his feet reach the ground as he snags a pass for a 20-yard gain in yesterday's Navy-Columbia game at Annapolis. Navy man making the tackle is Halfback Pete Williams

VIRGINIA—From P. 1-C

Virginia Has It Easy With Tech, 41 to 7

At this point, Grover Jones, a sophomore flier, busted off tackle for 28 yards for the second tally. Halfback Chip Collum of Tech set up the touchdown when he fumbled on the VPI 27 with Guard Stuart Barbour recovering.

Substituting his 18 racehorse backs freely, Coach Art Guepe saw his speed merchants deliver the mail for two more touchdowns in the third period.

The first was accounted for by Bruce Bailey, a 200-pounder who crashed over from the one after he and Pennel had spearheaded a passing and running attack which carried the Cavaliers from their own 35 to within 12 inches of the goal line.

Five minutes later it was 20-0, and this time a freshman back, Steve Osisek, dived over from the 1-yard line. The Cavaliers got a helping hand from the officials on this one. Referee C. A. Dandelake ruled that a Tech pass defender had interfered with Grimes as he attempted to snag Dick Michaels' 20-yard toss and put the ball in play on the 1.

Gene Schroder, former Anacostia High flash, paved the way for the next tally, halting a Tech drive by intercepting a pass on the Gobbler 41. Six plays later, Johnny Papit, highly publicized Philadelphia freshman, drove over from the 2. Freshman Osisek got the ball to the 2 with a brilliant 34-yard dash.

The Cavaliers wound up their scoring shortly before the game ended when Joe Black connected with End Ed Bessell on a 55-yard pass play.

Irish Win Over Pitt, 40-6, on Steady Scoring sturdy Panthers in the second half, aided by seeming limitless Notre Dame manpower which combined with the unseasonable heat to wear down the Pitts.

With 11 minutes and 40 seconds gone in the third period, Lujack heaved his second touchdown pass to Jim Martin from 35 yards out.

Lujack mixed passes with running plays beautifully to guide the Irish to a first down on the Pitt 38 as the four period opened. From here, End James Hart was his touchdown target. Coy McGee ran 20 yards for another Notre Dame score.

Mike Swistowicz set up the next score by intercepting a desperate Pitt aerial on the Panther 32 and racing to the 15. A line play and a penalty left Notre Dame 17 yards out, but Lancaster Smith tore off that yardage in one bullish rush through center.

Notre Dame attempted 20 passes and completed 12 for a gain of 204 yards, only 5 less than the net yards gained by Irish rushes.

Pitt gained only 46 yards in completing 4 of 18 passes and another 92 yards by punching at the Irish line. First downs were not quite so one-sided, with the Irish holding a 16-10 edge.

Big Bears Simply Too Powerful

Berkeley, Calif., Oct. 4 (AP).—Scoring practically at will, University of California's Bears walloped the St. Mary's Gaels, 45-6, today before a capacity crowd of 80,000 fans.

The Bears, now triumphant in their first three starts against Santa Clara, Navy and the Gaels and due to clash with Wisconsin next week at Madison, demonstrated today that Coach Lynn Waldorf has come up with the strongest California team since the championship Rose Bowl outfit of a decade ago.

Displaying crushing power with their running attack and connecting with accurate passes, they scored in every period including two in the third quarter and three in the last.

Big and hard hitting, they bottled up Herman Wedemeyer, an All-America choice two years ago, in practically all his efforts to run with the ball.

The Gaels put on one brief, flashy flurry to score in the third period. Taking the ball on their own 34, they moved downfield with Wedemeyer throwing two passes that gained a total of 26 yards, and from the 1-yard marker Quarterback Dennis O'Connor charged through for the touchdown.

In the closing minutes third and fourth string California players were on the field, and a halfback named Bill Montague raced 53 yards for the final touchdown.

Fullback Johnny Graves, aided by the pulverizing play of the big California lineman, ran wild in the first half. Once he dashed 20 yards to score in the second period, he broke loose for 66 yards and a touchdown.

Oregon State Wins

Seattle, Oct. 4 (AP).—The Flaming Orange forward wall of Oregon State College took things in its own hands today when its backs were unable to crack a 7-to-7 deadlock and blocked a University of Washington punt for the deciding counter in a 14 to 7 football triumph. It was the first Pacific Coast Conference game for the two teams and a crowd of 19,000 was in the stands.

The payoff came in the third after a duel between the two lines with Washington intercepting passes and O. S. C. recovering fumbles. End Dick Lorenz gave the cue when he swooped on Ottele's fumble at Washington's 30-yard stripe. With Twenge, right half Don Samuel and left half Ken Carpenter cracking the guards and tackles, the Beavers jammed their way to the Huskies' 2.

There Washington stiffened and held for downs. On the first Husky play, Beaver center Jim Swarbreck hurled himself in front of Larry Hatch's kick and Lorenz pounced on the ball behind the Washington goal line. Again Simas booted a perfect placement to wind up the scoring.

Georgia Surprises LSU, 35-19; Edwards, Reid Score Twice make a flat pass. Y. A. Tittle missed both placement attempts.

Wimberly had scored the first touchdown on an 18-yard pass from Tittle, whoch was preceded by a 15-yard run by Bill Schroll.

The Bulldogs charged back 63 yards for their first tally and then went 45 for the second with Rauch's passes highlighting both attacks. Bill Henderson and Floyd Reid led the ground assault into LSU territory, on the first drive but it stalled at the Tiger 30. Rauch then hit Weyman Sellers and Dan Edwards with short passes to make it first down on the 10. Reid bulled over on fourth down.

Bulldogs Cut Loose

The Bulldogs never let up from that point, scoring on a 15-yard pass, Rauch to Edwards. Joe Geri's placements made it 14-12 for Georgia at intermission.

Louisiana State clicked 52 yards early in the third period to again lead, 19-14. Tittle rammed over from the 3, and then added the extra point.

Rauch hit Edwards with a scoring pass from the 16 early in the last period, and shortly afterward Reid went over from the 15.

A pass-interception set up the last touchdown. Rauch tossed to Brunson from the 21 and the rookie scored.

Penn Drubs Lafayette As Luongo Runs Wild

Philadelphia, Oct. 4 (AP).—Pennsylvania pounded out a 59-0 victory over outclassed Lafayette today, treating a gathering of 51,293 sun-drenched fans to an avalanche of nine touchdowns. Fullback Bill Luongo's four tallies fell one short of a Penn record.

West Virginia Wallops Washington & Lee, 35-6

Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—Scoring in all except the second quarter, West Virginia University won its twenty-third victory over Washington and Lee today, 35-6, before 11,000 sweltering fans in the thirty-first renewal of their rivalry.

Purdue Upsets OSU

Lafayette, Ind., Oct. 4 (AP).—Purdue University's Boilermakers, uncorking a running attack to go along with Bob Demoss' forward passing, defeated favored Ohio State today, 24 to 20, and won their first Big Nine victory in two seasons.

Only two sensational breakaway runs by Halfback Dave Sensanbaugher—one a 97-yard kickoff return— kept Ohio State in the game against the savage tacking Boilermakers.

UCLA Bows, 27-26

Evanston, Ill., Oct. 4 (AP).—Northwestern upset heavily-favored ULCA, 27-26, today in a thriller settled on a 33-yard pass from Don Farrar to substitute Halfback Jules Siegle and Farrar's point after touchdown in the last period. ULCA blew a 13-0 second quarter lead.

Sooners Clip Texas Aggies By 26 to 14

Norman, Okla., Oct. 4 (AP).—Jack Mitchell, University of Oklahoma quarterback, was as hot as the weather here today as he scored one touchdown and passed to two others as the Sooners stopped the Texas Aggies, 26-14.

A crowd of 33,000 watched Oklahoma come back from a 14-6 deficit in the second period to bowl over the tiring Aggies.

Oklahoma scored first when Mitchell shot a pass to Bobby Goad who romped over the goal.

An Oklahoma fumble on the Sooner 33 gave the Aggies their first scoring opportunity. James Cashion passed to Barney Welch and Norton Higgins to move to the two. Ed Dusek crashed over and John Ballentine made the extra point to give the Aggies a 7-6 edge at the end of the first quarter.

A bad Oklahoma punt gave the Aggies the ball on the Sooner 27 at the end of the first period and they moved in three plays to the 15 where Stanley Hollmic passed to Cotton Howell.

Oklahoma scored what proved to be the winning touchdown when John Rapacz intercepted a pass on the Aggie 44. Six plays later, Thomas punched over from the 3.

Mitchell passed to George Brewer 24 yards for the final tally.

Duke Breaks Vol Jinx, 19 to 7

Breaks Give Blue Devils Easy Victory

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 4 (AP).—Duke finally broke the jinx today, defeating Tennessee easily for the first time on the Volunteers' home field, 19-7, before a homecoming crowd of 38,000 sweltering fans.

The victory kept Duke's season record unblemished and for Tennessee it was the second successive setback.

After battling on even terms in the first period, the Dukes broke loose with two touchdowns in the second and added another in the third. Tennessee, whose offense sputtered and fizzled throughout, capitalized on a Duke fumble on the Devils' five-yard line in the fourth period to punch over its lone score.

Fred Folger sparked Duke to its first score early in the second stanza. He flipped a 15-yard pass to Halfback Tom Hughes and then, after the Vols' line stiffened, faked a kick on fourth down and ran 23 yards to Tennessee's 18.

STATISTICS

39	Punting average (from scrimmage)	36
89	Total yards all kicks returned	98
4	Opponent's fumbles recovered	2
45	Yards lost by penalties	106

Fullback Paul Stephanz and Hughes picked up a first down to the Vol eight and Folger skirted left end to the one, setting up the score. Stephanz plunged over, climaxing the 54-yard drive.

A few minutes later a break gave the Blue Devils their second score. Vernon Heusser's snap from center on Tennessee's 28-yard line sailed over tailback Bob Lund's head. When Lund attempted to grab the oval on the Vol 12, it squirted out of his hands into the end zone. There was a mad scramble and Duke's Lawrence Karl, a reserve guard, grabbed it for the touchdown.

Mulligan Fools Vols

The Blue Devils' third tally popped out of nowhere late in the third period. Wingback Tom Mulligan came around his own left end on a delayed reverse and raced untouched 57 yards. Mulligan was far down the field before the befuddled Vols realized he had the ball.

Tennessee seemed to pick up some life from its touchdown. Hubert Becker, substitute tailback, carried over in two line plunges after Mark Major, sub fullback, recovered freshman Louis Viaux's fumble on Duke's 5.

Kansas Trims Cyclones, 27-7

Lawrence, Kans., Oct. 4 (AP).—A slow-starting University of Kansas football team uncorked a potent offensvie in the final three periods today to romp over the Iowa State Cyclnoes, 27 to 7 in the opening Big Six Conference game.

The Kansas' great halfback, Ray Evans, was used sparingly because of a knee injury but he added measurably to the Jayhawks attack.

Approximately 17,500 fans, many of them in shirt sleeves, saw Evans score two touchdowns, the first on a pass from Quarterback Lynne McNutt in the second period and the other on a six yard run in the final quarter.

William and Mary Blasts Citadel

Williamsburg, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—The William & Mary Indians smothered and completely outclassed the Citadel eleven today, 56 to 7.

William & Mary scored three touchdowns in the first period, one in the second, three in the third and one in the fourth. Stanley Magdziak scored one touchdown and added seven points from placement. Buddy Lex, Hampton, converted from placement after the Tribe's final touchdown.

Deacons, Stumble, Fumble

Safety Gives Wake Forest Victory Over Clemson, 16-14

Clemson, S. C., Oct. 4 (AP).—Wake Forest's demon Deacons almost fumbled and stumbled away a Southern Conference football game here today but finally came through with a fourth period 75-yard scoring march that gave them a 16-14 victory over the stubborn Clemson Tigers.

Fourteen thousand five hundred fans saw the lead see-saw four times.

The Deacons were superior in every department of play but had difficulty making their superiority pay off. They missed at least three or four touchdowns with misplay at crucial moments and the Clemson forwards stopped them once at the five yard line.

Wake Forest fumbles set up both Clemson touchdowns. The first came after a fumble by Carl Haggard at the Deacon 30, when John Poules, substitute Clemson end, grabbed one of Bobby Gage's deadly passes in the end zone.

The other followed soon afterwards as the Tigers pushed from the 13-yard line where George Pryor fumbled for the Deacons.

Wake Forest scored first in the second quarter when John O'Quinn blocked an attempted punt by Gage in the end zone and the ball bounced off the field for a safety.

The Deacons sandwiched a touchdown between the two Clemson tallies on a 71-yard drive climaxed by a 28-yard pass from Fetzer to Nick Ognovich.

The winning touchdown came in the final quarter on a long Wake Forest drive which ended as Tony Ditomo crashed over from the one. Ognovich converted on both occasions.

W. & M. Eleven Smothers Citadel, 56-7

Williamsburg, Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—The William & Mary Indians smothered and completely outclassed the Citadel eleven here today, 56 to 7, scoring in every period.

Coach R. N. McCray sent his first string to the showers midway through the third period, leaving the second and third teams and finally the freshmen to toy with the visitors.

Citadel scored in the final period on a 34-yard pass play. The entire Bulldog line fought heroically against the overwhelming weight of the Indians.

For William and Mary, Stanley Magdziak scored one touchdown and added seven points from placement.

W. Virginia Wins

Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 4 (AP).—West Virginia University warmed up in the second half after a slow start in the 80 degree heat and sizled to a 35-6 victory today over Washington and Lee before 11,000 spectators.

The Mountaineer "T" spluttered and sparked during the first quarter until Quarterback Tom Keane found a gaping hole on the right side and knifed through it to go 53 yards for the first touchdown. After intermission, the Mountaineers got two more touchdowns in the third and a pair in the last period, the final coming with less than 15 seconds left.

Washington and Lee, seeking the Generals' fiftieth victory in the 31-year-old rivalry, scored its lone touchdown in the final quarter on a 47-yard run to the 4 by Halfback Charles Harrington and two vicious pay-off lunges by Fullback Brian Bell.

Staunton Tops Devitt, 26-0

Staunton, Va., Oct. 4.—Devitt Prep suffered its first defeat of the season when they bowed to Staunton Military Academy of Virginia, 26-0, here yesterday.

The soldier boys first broke the ice in the early part of the first period, when Dave Waters fired a 33-yard pass to Norbert Small in the end zone. Spears kicked the extra point. Staunton scored twice in the second quarter, and in the fourth period Ray Line went nine yards through tackle to finish the day's scoring.

Trials Postponed Of Yale Men in Riot

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 4 (U.P.).—The cases of four Yale students, arrested following a two-hour pre-Cornell game riot in which nine persons were injured as nearly 1000 undergraduates blitzkreiged the city, were continued in City Court today until next Saturday.

A Yale spokesman said the university "would issue no statement yet."

Holy Cross Downs Temple By 19 to 13

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 4 (AP).—Off to a two-touchdown lead in the opening period, Holy Cross today downed Temple University, 19-13, before 16,000 fans.

It appeared as though the Crusaders would romp to an easy victory as they scored 13 points in the first 11½ minutes. The Holy Cross team took the opening kickoff on its own 20 and in 10 plays plugged through guard and off tackle to the 26 where Quarterback Wally Brennan passed to End Tom Kelleher in the end zone. Gene de Filippo kicked the extra point.

In five and a half minutes Holy Cross scored again. Bobby Farrell ran a Temple punt back to his 41 and after eleven more plays Bob Sullivan crashed over from the four. The conversion attempt failed.

Temple bounced back with its first score late in the second period. Sutton faked a pass and swept his own left end for the touchdown. The point try was low.

The home team moved right up the field for a touchdown after Temple kicked off. Kissell bulling his way into the end zone from the five.

Penn State Romps Over Bucknell, 54-0

State College, Pa., Oct. 4 (AP).—Larry Joe, fleet Penn State College back, took the opening kickoff for 95 yards and a touchdown to set the pattern for a smashing 54 to 0 Nittany Lion triumph over hapless Bucknell University today before a sun drenched crowd of 14,000.

Power-laden State, rated a definite threat for Eastern collegiate grid supremacy and a national title aspirant, equalled its highest score in the history of the ancient rivalry with Bucknell which began 61 years ago.

Coach Bob. Higgins cleared his bench as 40 players joined in the rout of the outmanned Bisons. State scored touchdowns by every conceivable means as it converted a kickoff return, a blocked punt, two pass interceptions, a forward pass, and three overland drives into six-pointers.

Povich to Be Guest Of Touchdown Club

Shirley Povich, sports columnist of The Washington Post, and other local writers will review the World Series at the first weekly fall luncheon of the Touchdown Club Tuesday at 12:30 p. m. Sportscaster Arch McDonald will serve as quizmaster.

Newly elected President Leslie G. Arries and other officers as well as the new board of governors will be introduced at the luncheon by Hugh P. (Bingo) Flynn, retiring president.

Alexandria Wins 3 Of 5 Football Tilts

Alexandria won three out of five football games with the Georgetown Branch Boys Club in Western Division Boys Club of Washington football competition yesterday on the Ellipse.

The Alexandria 80-pound team won, 13-0; the 120-pound club was victorious, 7-0, and the 140-pounders won, 13-0. Georgetown captured the 90-pound game, 7-0, and the 105-pound contest, 19-0.

Tulane Bows To Ga. Tech In 20-0 Rout

New Orleans, La., Oct. 4 (AP).—Georgia Tech's Yellow Jackets scored three touchdowns with arrogant ease, then held on throughout a dull second half to beat the Tulane Green Wave, 20 to 0, today before 48,000.

Tech looked so good in the first half that the Jackets could lose the ball five times on fumbles and still thoroughly outclass the Wave.

Tech went 51 yards in four plays for its first touchdown. The Jackets fumbled away two more scoring chances, then made another four-play scoring drive for 53 yards. George Mathews started Tech to its third touchdown by intercepting a pass from Bennie Ellender on the Jacket 4 and running it to the Tulane 41. Still immediately passed to Dinky Bowen for 30 yards and then to George Brodnax in the end zone.

The teams dispiritedly exchanged punts and fumbled during a scoreless third period, which ended as Tulane was starting its first offensive threat. The Wave rolled to the Tech 6 and lost the ball on downs.

Auburn Triumphs Over La. Tech, 14-0

Auburn, Ala., Oct. 4 (AP).—The Auburn Tiger gladdened the hearts of some 12,000 homecoming day fans here today with two touchdowns in the second half for a 14-0 victory over Louisiana Tech.

The first Tiger score on a 60-yard drive, was set up by a 45-yard run by Billy Ball, halfback from Winston-Salem.

Although the game was won, the last play of the contest provided the most spectacular moment. Travis Tidwell, the crippled Tiger star, dropped back for a fourth-down pass from the Auburn 40 with two seconds left.

He found End Bill Waddaill in the open at the Tech 20 and pitched a strike. Waddaill sprinted into the end zone after the gun had sounded. The play covered 60 yards.

Arkansas Tops TCU, 6 to 0

Fayetteville, Ark., Oct. 4 (AP).—A 44-yard pass play gave the University of Arkansas Razorbacks a first-quarter lead and from there on they relied on a stubborn goal-line defense to subdue Texas Christian University, 6 to 0, here today in the opening game of the Southwest Conference football race.

Arkansas, defending cochampions, went 79 yards on five plays for the afternoon's only touchdown, with Clyde (Smackover) Scott and Aubrey Fowler, fleet backs, leading the way. The march began after TCU's Carl Knox punted out of bounds on the Razorbacks 21-yard line.

Scott and Fowler brought the ball to the TCU 41, t.. whipped a pass to Melvin McGaha on the Frog 30, and the Arkansas end outran the Christian secondary to the goal.

Each team threatened four times in the last three quarters. Fumbles halted Arkansas short of pay dirt, once on the TCU two, and interceptions put out the Frogs' fire.

TCU's best opportunity fizzled when Cocaptain Tom Bishop dropped Joslin's 14-yard pass in the end zone in the fourth period.

Ol' Miss Tops Gamecocks

Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 4 (AP).—University of Mississippi hatched touchdowns in clusters today to overwhelm South Carolina, 33 to 0, for its third straight victory in a contest played in a drenching rain before 12,000.

The slippery football was no deterent to rifle-armed Charlie Conerly, who passed for three of the markers. A sub end, Jack Odom, sprinted 87 yards for another and the final counter came in the fourth period through the sweat of eager third-stringers.

The Gamecocks of the rival Southern Conference were able to muster only one first down while Mississippi, already victorious over Kentucky and Florida, racked up 14.

South Carolina drew one large ovation from the drenched crowd. That came at the end of the third period and beginning of the fourth when they held Mississippi for downs on their own 1-foot line and Hagan booted out to the 45.

Kramer, Brown In Tennis Finals

San Francisco, Oct. 4 (AP).—Tom Brown of San Francisco and National Amateur Champion Jack Kramer of Los Angeles advanced to the finals of the Pacific Coast tennis championships today.

Brown, seeded second, defeated Jim Brink of Seattle, 6—3, 6—2, 6—3, while Kramer beat Ed Moylan, San Francisco, 6—2, 6—4, 6—2, in the semifinals.

Dorothy Head, Alameda, defeated Nancye Bolton of Australia, 6—2, 4—6, 6—3, in Women's singles. Loren Main, Vancouver, B. C., defeated Suhr, jr., San Francisco, 7—5, 6—0, in the national boys hard court semifinals.

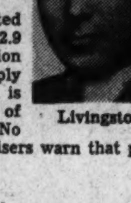
Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

High-Cost-of-Living Crisis



Livingston

The tension mounts. Russians continue to charge President Truman with warmongering. Secretary of National Defense Forrestal labels such talk "utter nonsense." Russia bars a group of United States Senators from visiting Moscow. The State Department studies retaliation measures, such as curbing Russian visitors to the United States. President Truman calls America Europe's "granary of hope," exhorts Americans to save 100 million bushels of grain by voluntary rationing, and asks congressional Committees on Foreign Affairs to convene "at the earliest possible date" to provide stopgap aid to Europe.

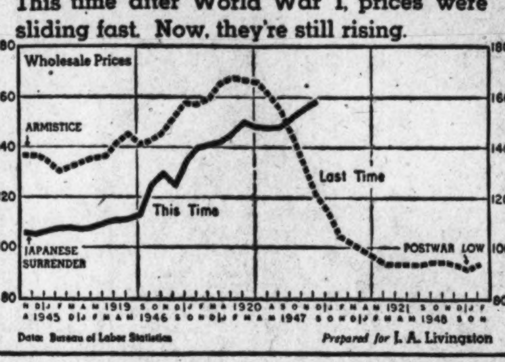
Here's the consequence: Inventories of United States manufacturers rise to an all-time high, 22.9 billion dollars. That's four and one-half billion dollars more than a year ago. That means simply this: The war of words, the war without bullets, is invading the marketplace and infecting the ways of businessmen. It encourages speculative buying. No wonder the President's Council of Economic Advisers warn that price controls or rationing might become necessary.

Wall Street Guessed Wrong

How attitudes change. Thirteen months ago America's frustration at the peace table stirred talk of a recession. Europe, so it was reasoned, would take longer to get on its feet and purchases of United States goods would drop. Thus, the stock market fell out of bed the day after Labor Day last year. Things were going to be tough in '47 was the Wall Street verdict. Then Russia was the Big Bear.

TWO YEARS AFTER TWO WARS

This time after World War I, prices were sliding fast. Now, they're still rising.



Data: Bureau of Labor Statistics

Prepared for J. A. Livingston

Wall Street was wrong.. Today, two years after the war, we're still calling on farmers for big plantings of wheat; we're shipping coal to Great Britain, France, and Austria. United States industry and agriculture are, in effect, on a war footing. We're not making munitions, true; but peacelessness has prevented us from converting to a domestic basis. The effect is dramatized by prices. At this time after the First World War, prices were dropping sharply. Today they're still on the rise (see chart).

As things stand today, the United States must set aside major amounts of agricultural machiney, freight cars, electric generating equipment, and petroleum products as well as grain and coal for shipments to Europe. The bulletless war, the Marshall Plan, accentuates domestic shortages of manpower, materials and machinery and so increases inflationary pressures—first on prices, which work on wages, which work on prices again. The main shortage is time. We can't be coy with Stalin. If Russia and the United States were not competing for Europe, then we'd not have to make such hectic haste. But we have no choice: The Stars and Stripes are in a flag-waving contest with Hammer & Sickle.

The United States is heading into a high-cost-of-living crisis. If the free market doesn't settle down—and what reason is there to think it will?—prices will go up far faster than the pay envelope. Some business men, especially the smaller ones, will join with labor in demanding stabilization. They won't be able to expand their credit fast enough to keep pace with price advances. And we may be forced to reinstitute wartime regulations, such as price ceilings and rationing. The weakness of a democracy at a time like this is that it lacks the social machinery for equitably distributing self-denial.

And so, in the immediate months ahead, the key business indicator is not steel production, or carloadings, or electric power production. It's prices, and such secondary reflections of price changes as bank loans and bankruptcies. If prices continue to rise, if voluntary restraint among business men and ultimate consumers doesn't succeed, then America has these alternatives:

1. Hope for the best; that is, muddle through.
2. Abandon ourselves to inflation.
3. Abandon the Marshall Plan.
4. Reimpose controls.

The choice seems obvious: Controls. Americans will take just so much inflation and then clamor for regulation in self-defense. One immediate effect would be a wave of strikes or strike threats for higher wages. Working-class housewives are definitely feeling the squeeze. That shows up in the below-a-year-ago sales of apparel stores.

Ford workers illustrate the point. Despite the recommendation of their union leaders, they rejected a 7-cent wage boost plus a pension plan in favor of an 11½-cent-an-hour increase plus six holidays. Under the second plan they got about $100 retroactive back pay. Money in the pocket looked better than long-term old-age security.

Russians Burn Bridges

As for abandoning the Marshall Plan, that seems unlikely in view of Soviet antics in the United Nations, Soviet pressure in the Balkans, and Soviet actions in general. Secretary of State Marshall owes a vote of thanks to the Russian bureaucrat who said "No" to Senator Styles Bridges (R., N. H.) and party when they sought visas to visit the American Embassy in Moscow. That means votes for European aid when the issue comes up in the Senate. It may well be said that the Russians burned our Bridges.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Oct. 4 (AP).—News that the distilled spirits industry planned to cut grain purchases and a private crop report noting an improvement in corn prospects combined to send grains down for losses of several cents today.

Dealings on the Board of Trade were not particularly active and part of the early losses were reduced before the close. Once again corn was the weakest grain and traders said some selling in the yellow cereal over the past few days could be traced to distillers.

Wheat closed 2½ to 3½ lower, December 2.81½@2.81; corn was 3¾ to 4½ lower, December 2.21½@2.21¼, and oats were unchanged to 1⅜ lower, December 1.10⅞@1.11¼.

The Distilled Spirits Institute, representing 60 per cent of the distilling industry, agreed to cut use of all grains 50 per cent. It was said that if the entire industry followed the institute's leadership the saving would amount to 2,500,000 bushels a monh, mostly corn.

Grain analysts pointed out that this was not much in view of exports of between 30 and 40 million bushels a month. They said that the big saving of grain must be made in reduction of consumption by livestock and added that this ultimately would be based upon meat and livestock prices.

The Galvin-Bennett crop report placed corn production at 2,446,988,000 bushels, compared with an estimate of 2,375,008,000 bushels a month earlier. The September 1 Government estimate was 2,403,913,000 bushels. Improvement in the outlook was expected by the grain trade.

Light rains fell in Hutchinson, Wichita and Topeka, Kans. Moisture in Kansas was considered highly important as private reports said, "Dust storms are already occurring in parts of central Kansas and if this should spread throughout the State, another 'dust bowl' could develop."

Auto Demand Still Exceeds Production

Detroit, Oct. 4 (AP).—The Nation's automobile industry lost close to 16 million units of passenger-car production during the war years and to date has made up none of the deficit.

Instead, it has fallen farther than ever behind a volume of demand that continues to mount despite prices that are a minimum of 50 per cent higher than they were before the war.

In the 27 months since postwar production got under way in the car factories the assembly lines have rolled out approximately 4,845,000 passenger vehicles. The total is fewer than the number that normally would have gone to the scrap heap in that period.

The industry's top executives are predicting that five years may elapse before automobile output and distribution again will be on normal basis. They do not talk about demand being filled; rather they talk about a year's production meeting that year's demand—the time when delivery may be obtained in a matter of a few days rather than in an indefinite future.

Predictions Recalled

When the factories got back into peacetime production after the war there was much talk about an annual output of five million passenger cars and about one million trucks. That level, maintained for about three years, it was said, soon would bring supply and demand on an even plane.

Undoubtedly it would have cut sharply into the accumulated bank of unfilled orders. But the industry probably never will turn out that many vehicles in one year, despite the fact it has a large amount of unused capacity at present.

When the factories in 1929 made 4,587,400 passenger automobiles and 771,020 commercial vehicles, they worked six days a week and three shifts a day. Management is pretty well agreed that three-shift assembly line operation is not only uneconomical but impractical for many reasons under present day costs for manufacturing and materials.

The industry quite generally expects to produce more cars next year than it will during 1947, but the increase probably will not be more than about three quarters of a million units over the hoped-for 3,750,000 this year. Abut 1,250,000 trucks also will be produced this year.

1948 Truck Prospects

There is more than a possibility that 1948 truck output will not be as high as this year's indicated total. Truck production currently is at a rate more than 50 per cent above the immediate prewar average and already demand is reported to be leveling off for the heavier weight vehicles.

But it does not follow that a reduction in truck volume will be reflected in a corresponding increase in passenger vehicle assemblies; passenger cars cannot be made in truck plants; neither would a lowered truck production release much material adaptable to passenger-car output.

The expected increase in passenger-car production will come from greater availability of sheet steel and from sustained assembly plant operations which the industry was unable to achieve through much of the present year.

Gotham Banks Report Drop in 9-Month Net

New York, Oct. 4 (AP).—Chase National Bank reports deposits on September 30 of $4,541,741,000, compared with $4,445,081,000 on June 30 and $4,642,025,000 on September 30, 1946. Loans and discounts of $1,264,225,000, compared with $1,203,007,000 on June 30 and $1,087,026,000 on September 30, 1946.

Net earnings for nine months ended September 30 were equal to $1.85 a share, including net profits on securities amounting to four cents a share. This compares with net earnings of $2.40 a share in the same 1946 period when the net profit on securities amounted to 40 cents a share.

Guaranty Trust Co. of New York reported increases in total resources, deposits, United States Government obligation holdings and loans and bills purchased as of September 30 over June 30. Deposits were $2,475,101,407, against $2,417,706,061 June 30. Loans and bills purchased totaled $789,353,139 compared with $679,092,158 June 30. Net profits for nine months ended September 30 were $13,664,515, against $15,058,341 in the similar 1946 period.

Chemical Bank & Trust Co., reported assets of $1,321,804,300, compared with $1,293,093,043 June 30; deposits of $1,195,134,163, against $1,168,958,598 June 30; loans and discounts of $398,194,912, against $369,080,856 June 30. Net operating earnings were $1,623,916, equal to 66 cents a share, compared with $1,782,938, or 70 cents a share, in the second quarter.

Manufacturers Trust Co. reported resources of $2,299,713,391, against $2,259,911,590 June 30; deposits of $2,153,427,086, against $2,113,002,694 June 30; loans of $478,137,330, against $450,415,149; and United States Government securities of $1,139,511,194, against $1,175,263,724.

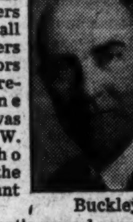
Brown Brothers, Harriman & Co., private bankers, report a new high in deposits and resources as of September 30. Total assets on that date were $262,480,901 compared with $250,952,016 on June 30 and $231,389,364 on September 30, 1946. Deposits amounted to $231,602,633 on September last compared with $224,226, 511 on June 30 and $202,661,492 on September 30 last year. Loans and discounts totaled $61,404,302 against $56,142,926 on June 30, 1947, and $54,411,616 on September 30, 1946.

United Hit Air Freight Peak In September

United Air Lines flew over a million air freight ton miles in a single month, according to estimated September air freight figures announced yesterday by M. P. Bickley, manager of cargo sales, setting a high record.

In operating an estimated 1,024,874 ton miles last month, United topped by 36 per cent its August figure of 752,641 ton miles and by 130 per cent the 445,485 ton miles flown in September, 1946. In addition, the week of September 21 through September 27 proved to be the heaviest seven-day period ever operated when an estimated 341,760 ton miles were flown.

Air mail ton miles in September were estimated at 714,127, up 9 per cent from 653,435 ton miles in August and 20 per cent over the 596,169 ton miles in September last year. Bickley said the company flew an estimated 537,080 ton miles of air express last month, down 3 per cent from 553,057 ton miles the previous month and 2 per cent above the 536,208 ton miles operated in September a year ago.



Buckley

BUILDING UNIT ELECTS: Robert E. Buckley was reelected president of the National Permanent Building Association at the fifty-seventh annual meeting of the shareholders Friday, with all other officers and directors also being reelected. One new officer was named, John W. Stadtler, who was given the post of assistant treasurer.

The president's annual report revealed that the past 12 months were highly satisfactory, with resources climbing four million to a new peak of 24 million dollars.

Shareholders increased their accounts by $2,600,000 during the year and now have more than 21 million dollars to their credit.

The surplus account was increased by a quarter of a million dollars to a total of $1,350,000, the report disclosed.

Officers, in addition to Buckley and Stadtler, are Joseph F. Zegowitz, vice president; Roland M. Brown, secretary; W. Preston Hunt, treasurer; Joseph F. Zegowitz, jr., assistant secretary.

Directors are Millard T. Dixon, Alphonse C. Hammer, James E. Colliflower, John H. Stadtler, C. J. Mack, Joseph F. Horning and Frederick Stohlman.

PROGRAM FOR THRIFT: Policies of thrift and home financing institutions for 1948 will be discussed at the board of governors meeting of the National Savings and Loan League in Coronado, Calif., October 19 to 23, it was announced yesterday by Curtis F. Scott of New Orleans, president of the league. Savings and loan leaders from nearly every State in the union and Federal officials will participate in the discussions, which include a business management panel, a construction loan panel and a discussion of the GI loan developments. T. Bertram King, director of the Loan Guaranty Service of the Veterans Administration in Washington, will speak on the GI loan program, the afternoon of October 21.

ODD LOTS: The National Foundation for Science and Industry reports: A square plastic egg shell that holds the contents of a single egg with its shell removed. The plastic egg container is small, withstands boiling temperatures, eliminates the present breakage losses and reduces storage and shipping space . . . A "beginner's" airplane that requires no skill to fly, levels off by itself and lands at 20 miles an hour . . . An airplane flight timer that records the actual time the airplane was in the air . . . A radio control switch that turns the radio off when you use the telephone. The radio comes back on when you're finished talking . . . An automatic awning that comes down when it rains and goes up when it's clear . . . A combination shaving brush that has the shaving cream in the handle. You apply the brush and automatically get lather . . . A hub cap remover that eliminates the marring and damage caused by the old-fashioned screwdriver or hammer . . .

INSURANCE CLASSES: The Life Insurance Institute of Washington started 1947-48 classes this week. The institute offers courses to prepare life underwriters for chartered life underwriter degrees. About 100 registered for the four courses being taught by George Link, assistant secretary of Acacia Mutual; Charles W. O'Donnell, general agent of Guardian Life; Joseph A. Marr, general agent of Penn Mutual ,and Joseph Silverman, general agent of Franklin Life..

Leading Stocks Gain for Sixth Straight Day

New York, Oct. 4 (AP).—The stock market today resumed business at the same old Saturday stand, after the lengthy summer recess, and leaders managed to make headway for the sixth straight session, despite considerable prolit cashing on the bulge.

As throughout the week, professionals continued cautious bidding on the idea that the fall rally could be extended substantially, especially if large-scale dollar relief for Europe gets under way. The direction was upward from Monday on, although numerous commission house clients held aloof or trimmed commitments because of doubts regarding foreign affairs and the course of domestic inquiry in the face of mounting living costs.

WHAT STOCKS DID:

	Sat.	Fri.
Advances	371	615
Declines	176	211
Unchanged	193	191
Total issues	740	1017

In the day's short proceedings boardrooms were more or less deserted by customers who were unable to shake off the habit of a lengthy weekend. Dealings tapered after a fairly active opening. While declines were plentiful at the close, plus marks maintained the majority. Transfers of 440,000 shares compared with 230,000 on the last previous Saturday of May 24, which were a low since May 1944. The six-day volume was 5,404,430 shares against the previous 5-day aggregate of 3,531,950. In the final six-session May week trading amounted to 5,657,270 shares.

Better gainers on the day included Union Pacific, Santa Fe, Youngstown Sheet, Goodrich, J. I. Case, Douglas Aircraft, Gar Wood, Kennecott, American Telephone and International Harvester. Standard Gas preferred issues dropped 2 or more points each on word directors were at variance on reorganization plans. Allied Chemical conceded 3 and Skelly Oil 1½. Backward were U. S. Steel, Northern Pacific, Anaconda, Mission Corp., General Motors and duPont.

Railway bonds stiffened.

Avco Nets 63 Cents A Share in 9 Months

New York, Oct. 4 (AP).—Avco Manufacturing Corp. has reported consolidated net income for the nine months ended August 31 of $4,622,314, equal after preferred dividends to 63 cents each on the 6,614,674 common shares then outstanding. The company gave no comparable figures because operating results of the Crosley, New Idea and American Central divisions were not included in the consolidated report for the same period last year.

Credit Control End Seen Boosting Auto Demand

Detroit, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—Finance company officials predicted today that the end of Government controls over installment buying of automobiles would increase the huge demand for new cars and threaten further price hikes.

The Federal Reserve Board's "Regulation W," which requires a one third down payment and a 15-month limit on installments for cars and certain other items, expires November 1, but it will be replaced by voluntary controls.

Banks and finance companies, for the most part, will continue to require the one third down payment but will extend the installment period up to 24 months.

The finance people said the extended installment period would increase the ordinary customer's desire for new cars through the inducement of lower monthly payments. The higher demand might bid up prices.

Langendorf Bakeries

Langendorf Bakeries, Inc., reports for the fiscal year ended June 28, 1947, net profit after all charges of $983,346, equal to $7.08 per share on the Class "B" stock. This compares with $510,399 net profit for the preceding fiscal year and to $2.82 per share on the Class "B" stock.

Arrest Stops Youth's Easy Hotel Living

A two-week adventure featuring easy and stylish living—at no expense—ended abruptly yesterday for a 17-year-old youth who tried the same hotel once too often.

The youth told police he left his home in Cincinnati, Ohio, September 22 and has been supporting himself since by registering at the best hotels, buying plane and train tickets on his hotel account, cashing same, and skipping out.

The scheme, he admitted, worked in Cleveland, Washington, Richmand and Charleston. When arrested yesterday at Union Station he was trying to cash a ticket to Richmond.

His arrest followed a tip to police by a Mayflower Hotel clerk, who recognized the youth when he attempted to register there yesterday for the third time. Police laid a trap and sprang it at the station.

Less luxurious living began for him yesterday when he took up residence in the receiving home.

To Join Legal Fraternity

The three local chapters of Gamma Eta Gamma, national legal fraternity, will hold a joint initiation and dinner at 6 p. m. today in the Mayflower Hotel.

The large class to be initiated at the dinner sponsored by the chapters at Catholic, Georgetown and George Washington Universities is named the "James W. Morris Class" in honor of Associate Justice James W. Morris of the local District Court.

Justice Morris will be the chief speaker at the dinner.

Page to Retire October 31 From Interior Dept.

John C. Page, 59, of Denver, Colo., commissioner of reclamation from 1937 to 1943, will retire from Federal service October 31, the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, announced yesterday.

Firemen's Auxiliary To Hold Flower Sale

The Ladies Auxiliary of the Maryland State Firemen's Association will hold its annual black-eyed-susan sale throughout Maryland during Fire Prevention Week, October 5 to 11.

Funds raised through the sale of the buttonhole flowers made by auxiliary members will help finance the firemen's hospitalization fund.

Public Opinion Blamed for Lapse In Armed Forces

The Irish War Veterans, U.S.A., last night heard Brig. Gen. William E. Riley, USMC, blame "lack-adaisical public opinion" for the difficulty in maintaining the size of the United States armed forces.

"If it is honorable to take up arms in time of war," he said, "then it is honorable in times of peace to learn to use those arms."

In a business session, George L. Cassiday, 127 B st. se., was re-elected national commander. John C. Clarke of Philadelphia was elected senior vice commander, and Charles J. McAuliffe, 6916 33rd st. nw., was elected quartermaster.

Exceptionally different from the average home being offered in this fine home section, is this most attractive home we are offering today for the 1st time, because of owner being transferred. It is brick and frame, 6 large rooms and 2 complete tile baths; 3 large bedrooms, 1 and bath on 1st floor; 2 and bath on 2nd; oil heat, recessed radiators, built-in, attached garage, full basement with maid's room; built-in bookcases; knotty pine paneling in dining room. There are 2 open fireplaces, 1 in the kitchen and 1 in the living room; a screened side rear porch overlooking beautiful wooded grounds of ¼-acre which is impossible to adequately describe. And the whole is being offered at a price which, in our expert opinion, offers more for the money than anything else in this section. The price is $21,000. Substantial cash payment is required, and it is to be shown only on a definite appointment in advance through the offices of

DIFFERENT! I'LL SAY

You will have to look a long time to find anything to match this custom-built modernistic rambler. Tastefully furnished, completely fireproof with both solar and radiant heat; was worth a write-up in the Architectural Forum. The exceptionally large liv. rm. with firepl., has 2 sides of glass which create an outdoor atmosphere that is really delightful. The four large bedrms., one of which is a master bedrm. with pvt. bath, has built-in furniture and lovely lge. closets with sliding doors. The nice large modern kitchen with adjoining servants' quarters completes the interior picture, while a 2-car attached gar. with shop space gives you puttering space. When you go out on the spacious brick terrace adj. the liv. rm., you notice the swimming pool which you will enjoy during the warm summer days, and the view of the valley with its fine fishing streams bordering the property brings up visions of a pleasant afternoon sport. Situated on 32 acres of wooded ground with long road frontage, only 35 min. drive from D. C. on dual lane hwy. This is truly a sanctuary to look forward to after a hard day in the office. Completely furnished; moderately priced with attractive terms. Shown by appt. Exclusive with

Willows Beach Colony
"CHESAPEAKE BAY'S DIFFERENT RESORT"
Property owners at Willows Colony are building homes now for next season. See the five homes now being built. You will find they are much better-than-average beach houses. This is concrete evidence of how our protective covenants are working to establish high values for property owners at Willows. You will also find that Willows Colony is a much-better-than-average development. See the new bathhouse with its modern toilet and shower facilities. Every property owner is a member of Willows Beach Club. (The bathhouse is the first unit to be built for the beach club. Future plans include a community house, boat harbor, golf course and play areas.) Though you may not plan to build at Willows in the near future, your family is assured a comfortable means of enjoying the bathing, boating, hunting and fishing at this restricted resort. Large wooded and open building sites, all with good views of Chesapeake Bay, are still available at pre-development prices. Generous terms, requiring 20% cash offered for time purchase. Representatives on property every day. Come as our guests any day. Drive to Marlboro, then take Routes 4, 416 and 260 to Chesapeake Beach, turn right there on Shore rd. 5 miles to entrance sign. When the Bugle Blows at Laurel
By Charles Del Vecchio—The Washington Post

OCTOBER'S bright blue weather brings the sport of kings to the race course at Laurel, Md. Wednesday — the opening day—was a gala event with Henry Parr 3d, president of Laurel, entertaining at a buffet luncheon at the clubhouse. Officials from Washington, and noted figures in the sport world were among the guests. Above, show-offs in the paddock, start the trek to the post as horselovers cheer them on

THE drive from Washington through the Maryland countryside produced healthy appetites by lunch time. Here is Miss Sylvia Szechenyi, daughter of Countess Szechenyi and the late Hungarian Minister to the United States, filling the plate of Jan Ciechanowski, son of the former Polish Ambassador and Mme. Ciechanowski, who have made their home here since the Ambassador resigned

Food's Scarce But—

Champagne Corks Pop For Bidaults

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

IT has been a French weekend from start to finish. Wednesday, the French Embassy staff, plus wives, some fifty strong, lined up in Union Station to welcome France's Foreign Minister and Mme. Georges Bidault. Thursday, some thousand plus were invited to an Embassy reception in their honor. In keeping with the times sandwiches and such were nonexistent, orange juice and Moet and Chandon champagne (which sends dollars back to France) were the drinks.

Mme. Bonnet wore a last season's frock, mottled blue and black taffeta with the hem let down. Mme. Bidault's long, long black jersey dress had a fancily draped skirt. M. Bidault, showing extraordinary stamina, as each lady was presented, kissed her hand.

There was the usual agreeable mixture of diplomats, politicians, State Department notables and the unavoidable press. High points were the coveys of ostrich-trimmed hats, Lady Inverchapel's dashing green numero trimmed a le chasseur with pheasant feathers; Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Ed Foley's elegant cutaway; Mrs. George Abell's diamond elephant; Secretary of Agriculture Anderson's snappy blue and black tie.

Friday morning Mme. Bonnet went to the White House to see Chief Justice Vinson receive the Legion of Merit, returned in time for a hen luncheon in honor of Mme. Bidault. Smart Mme. Bonnet straddled the meat problem by serving scallops swooning in mushroom sauce, a flaming sweet omelette for dessert; sidestepped the seating problem by getting guests to draw lots for seats.

Mme. Bidault Speaks Up

MME. BIDAULT is intelligent, friendly and like you and me, struggles to keep thin. She has had a fascinating life—worked on a newspaper in French Indo-China where her military father was stationed; became a lady diplomat, was daring in the French Resistance, topped it all by marrying her boss, M. Bidault and now has to work twice as hard, 16 instead of 8 hours a day. Queried about her husband's reaction to such nonpolitical problems as American women, she admitted he liked 'em, especially the tall with beautiul legs. After another dinner or two, the Bidault's will return to New York, leave for France Thursday.

Party for Mme. Raindre

SATURDAY evening, Pierre Siraud added to French festivities, partying for Mme. Jean Raindre. Mme. Raindre is the former Genevieve de Noailles, granddaughter of the Duc de Noailles, daughter of the late Duc D'Ayen, and niece of Lady McCready who was so popular in wartime Washington. Genevieve worked in the Resistance movement, was twice arrested. Her father died in a German concentration camp, her brother was killed by the Nazis. Since the eldest branch of the distinguished de Noailles family is wiped out—she will inherit the famous Chateau of Maintenon, which was built for Louis XV's mistress. Jean Raindre has just finished two years in the Harvard Business School, will return soon to France. Meanwhile, his wife has a fulltime job in the U. N.

Grateful Artist Shows Work

AT THE Corcoran Gallery there's a just-opened exhibition of Ivan Mestrovic's sculpture. It is the Jugoslav sculptor's first Washington showing since his arrival as refugee over a year ago. Rated the most famous living sculptor, his spring exhibition at New York's Metropolitan Museum was a huge success.

Though Mestrovic specializes in heroic, outsize statuary he's shortish, frail, has a curly brown-gray beard, enormous eyes. An artist, he shunned politics, yet Tito's government imprisoned him for almost five months, the Pope finally effecting his release.

Though not tortured, bad food and overcrowding made him ill and he spent two years convalescing in Switzerland. Malvina Hoffman, our remarkable sculptress, persuaded Mestrovic to come here. Now he's ensconsed at the University of Syracuse, has his own studio, a number of talented students. Eager to show his gratitude to this country, Mestrovic, though still in bad health, judges all sorts of art shows, helps arrange exhibitions.

Duchess Opposes Long Skirts

London, Oct. 4.—The Duchess of Windsor is creating consternation among Paris fashion leaders by supporting British women in their campaign against the long skirt, London newspaper columnists have reported.

The columnists said that the Duchess, considered one of the world's best-dressed women, so far has refused all pleas by Paris fashion designers to let her hemline down to the length they have decreed as the latest style.

However, the Duke and Duchess are scheduled to visit the United States soon to avoid unpleasantness surrounding the Duchess' exclusion from Princess Elizabeth's wedding November 20 and reportedly she has asked to see collections of the new long skirts.

The columnists predicted that the Duchess' decision would have a major effect in the long-skirt controversy and would be tantamount to a smashing victory for whichever fashion she favors.

The Duchess' present dressmaker is Captain Molyneux, who has described the long skirt as a "glaring error in psychology" and "antisocial." Fashionable Paris is waiting expectantly to see if she changes her dressmaker, the columnists said.

Kon-Tiki Men Party Hosts

By Elizabeth Maguire

VIKINGS of the Kon-Tiki expedition entertained at a cocktail party at the Norwegian Embassy yesterday afternoon. The leader, Thor Heyerdahl, received with Ambassador and Mme. Morgenstierne and five members of the expedition.

The 350 guests included diplomatic representatives from the French, Danish, Peruvian and Ecuadorian Embassies and the Swedish and Icelandic Legations. The Kon-Tiki expedition recently drifted 4300 miles on a raft from Peru to the Coral Islands, where they were picked up by a French schooner and taken to Tahiti. The drift proves, the Kon-Tiki group says, a theory of early migration from the Americas to Oceania.

The Service Set

Miss Ambrose Busy With Plans For Wedding to Ensign Blandy

By Bessie Hackett

WEDDING plans and showers . . . foreign visitors . . . those parties that keep cropping up for newly appointed officers of the revamped Air Force . . . the reawakening of women's clubs after the summer lull . . . the comings and goings of reassigned families . . . all are keeping the service set in a state of varied activity these early fall days.

June Ambrose, daughter of Capt. (USN) and Mrs. Homer Ambrose, is all wrapped up in preparations for her marriage next Sunday to Ensign William P. Blandy, son of Admiral and Mrs. W. H. P. Blandy. The wedding in Alexandria's Emmanuel Church-on-the-Hill will be comparatively simple. June will have only two attendants—her former classmate at Simmons College, Carolyn McIntosh of Pittsburgh as maid of honor, and little Ann Armitage, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Armitage of Alexandria as flower girl. Ensign J. M. Balfe, USN, will act as best man and four classmates of the bridegroom—a 1947 graduate of the Naval Academy—will serve as ushers. June doesn't know yet where her future home will be. Her fiance is attached to the battleship Missouri, "so I guess I'll just be following the ship around," says this prospective Navy wife.

WASHINGTON'S big military brass is getting all set to welcome and entertain one Gen. Salih Omurtak, chief of the Turkish General Staff, who is expected to arrive in the Capital tomorrow, accompanied by 14 fellow Turkish officers—nine Army, two Navy and three Air Force.

With the Shoreham Hotel as headquarters, the Turkish military party plans a 30-day tour of United States military installations and industrial plants from Boston to San Diego. Between them, the members speak six languages—English, French, German, Italian, Japanese and Turkish. General Omurtak, whose brilliant military career started back in 1907, is the only bachelor officer of the group.

Wednesday, the Turkish Ambassador, Huseyin Ragip Baydur, is planning a stag luncheon at the embassy for the visitors and the following evening a reception for about a thousand guests is scheduled, also at the Turkish Embassy.

'Social List' Solves New Protocol

By Marie McNair

THAT perplexing problem of potocol which besets harassed hostesses in Washington is neatly and compactly solved in a two-page supplement inclosed in the 1947 edition of the Social List of Washington.

MRS. SHAW

When Mrs. Carolyn Hagner Shaw's green-covered volume was on the presses last week, the social apple cart was upset with the announcement that the new Secretary of Defense would find his place card at the dinner table three seats higher than when he was Secretary of the Navy. Changes, therefore, were necessary all down the line.

Supplement Added

Mrs. Shaw quickly got to work, compiled the Department of Defense and a table of precedence from the President down to major generals and rear admirals. This valuable bit of information is being tucked between the leaves of the Social List to be ready when the books go out to subscribers this week.

It's interesting to note in the new precedence table that the age-old dispute about the rank of the Chief Justice has at last been settled. "NEVER invite the Chief Justice and an Ambassador to the same dinner party," Mrs. Shaw has for years been cautioning aspiring hostesses.

Now, apparently, the Chief Justice outranks an Ambassador, coming immediately after the President. A former President should be seated just below the Chief Justice and United States representatives to the United Nations follow the Secretary of State.

Name Problem Solved

But that's not the only problem that Mrs. Shaw has solved for her subscribers. If you remember Mrs. Smith's little girl only as Susie Smith, you'll find her maiden name with her married name under the new department "Maiden Name Crisscross"

Then there are the usual features such as Social Precedence and the Correct Social Forms which offers procedure on calling and calling cards; how to address dignitaries both verbally and in writing; the sending and acknowledging of invitations. In addition, the publisher is available—to subscribers only—for any assistance relative to precedence and social problems.

The board of governors this year removed almost 700 names from the book, and included almost a thousand new ones. Only about one third of the applicants made the grade.

You'll find clubs, hotels, apartment houses, emergency telephone numbers, all in their ususal places and the postoffice should certainly award Mrs. Shaw a medal for including zone numbers with addresses.

ON HER first visit since the war to the Isle of Barra which she purchased almost a dozen years ago, Mrs. Stevens Macneil has found happiness and given it, too, to the school children of the island. It was in 1936 that Mrs. Macneil of Barra established a garden club on picturesque Barra for the teen-agers in the seven schools. She encouraged competition among the junior horticulturists and the following year there was a cup and name badges to vie for, presented by the International Garden Club.

This year the club sent over a generous donation of garden

Annapolis Fetes British Navy Group

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 4.—Preceding the Navy-Columbia University football game, played here this afternoon, Vice Admiral Sir William Tennant, British commander in chief of the American and West Indies Station, had lunch with the midshipmen in Bancroft Hall and afterward toured the Naval Academy. He attended the football game with 10 officers from the H. M. S. Sheffield, a British light cruiser, which arrived here Tuesday with 57 officers and 730 men aboard.

A number of social affairs have been given in honor of Admiral Tennant and the British visitors. Among them was a reception following the game today at the quarters of the superintendent of the Naval Academy, Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., and Mrs. Holloway. A reception will be given aboard the Sheffield tomorrow evening before the British group leaves Annapolis.

Class Has Reunion

Members of the Naval Academy class of 1935, on duty in the vicinity of Annapolis, invited their wives to attend the midday party which they held at the North Severn Officers Club last Saturday. Comdr. Ross E. Freeman was in charge of the arrangements.

The class of 1942 also held a party at North Severn on Saturday, and with their wives and guests, were present for cocktails and the Navy-California game radio party. The group stayed on at the club for dinner and dancing. Lieut. Comdr. J. A. Fairchild was chairman of the committee on arrangements, assisted by Lieut. Comdr. P. V. Smith.

Dr. Everett Homer Dickinson of Philadelphia and Mrs. Charles Corwin Rose of Annapolis have announced the engagement of their daughter, Mary Frances Dickinson, to Dr. Edward Douglas Horning, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Horning of Detroit, Mich. The wedding will take place in Annapolis in the spring.

Many informal parties have been given during the week in honor of Miss Dickinson and Dr. Horning. The bride-elect is a member of the sophomore class at George Washington University and her fiance, who is a graduate of Williams College and of the Yale University School of Medicine, is a fellow in neuro-surgery at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn.

Dr. Horning will be the guest until Tuesday of Capt. and Mrs. Ross and Miss Dickinson.

Miss Deyo Engaged

Rear Admiral Morton L. Deyo, USN, comandant of the First Naval District, and Mrs. Deyo have announced the engagement of their daughter, Lila Mayo Deyo, to James Harper Poor Garnett, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Y. P. Garnett of Washington, D. C.

Miss Deyo, who formerly lived here, is a member of the Junior League of Washington. Mr. Garnett was graduated from University of Virginia and is now attending the George Washington University school of medicine. He was a captain, U. S. Marine Corps, during World War II, in combat in Pacific campaigns from Guadalcanal to Iwo Jima.

Mrs. Norman B. Wells and her daughter, Mary Elizabeth, have left to spend a month in Paragould, Ark., where they will visit Mrs. Wells' parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Ford. On October 19 Mrs. Wells will be the matron of honor at the wedding of her sister, Miss Mary Carolyn Ford, to Charles Frederick Landrum, in Paragould.

Capt. and Mrs. Ruppert M. Zimmerli have returned to their home here after driving their son, Robert Zimmerli, to Michigan, where he has entered the sophomore class at the university. En route home they visited Captain Zimmerli's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zimmerli, in Detroit.

Truman Pays Tribute As BPW Week Opens

ON the eve of National Business Women's Week, October 5 to 11, President Truman yesterday sent a message of tribute to the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, sponsor of the celebration.

"National Business Women's Week gives me the welcome opportunity to pay tribute to the business and professional women of this country for the part they played in winning the war and for their current activities to win the peace," the Chief Executive said.

"Through my long experience in government," he continued, "I have come to have a great respect for the influence American women exert to better their community, their State and their Nation.

"I know that the business and professional women throughout the country will continue to do everything they can to keep the United States in the forefront of the struggle for permanent world peace."

'We Face Tomorrow'

Theme of this twentieth annual observance is "We Face Tomorrow," and the seven-day period will be punctuated throughout the country by special programs arranged by BPW clubs to emphasize what business women have done and what they hope to do socially, economically and politically in their communities and the world at large.

In the Capital, arrangements have been made for members of the District of Columbia Business and Professional Women's Club to attend 10 a. m. mass today at St. Matthew's Cathedral and the 4 p. m. service at Washington Cathedral.

Radio broadcasts highlighting the week's activities include a discussion at 9:30 a. m. today on WTOP's District of Columbia Dateline program, featuring Dr. Irma Gene Nevins, president of the District of Columbia group; Mrs. Ellen Woodward, director of inter-agency and international relations, Federal Security Agency, and Edgar Morris, past president of the Board of Trade and recently elected director of the United States Chamber of Commerce. In an interview over Station WRC at 12:45 p. m. Wednesday, Nancy Osgood will interview Miss Ann Sarachon Hooley, only American woman who attended the eleventh congress of the International Union of Catholic Women's Leagues held recently in Europe.

Luncheon Saturday

Climax of the celebration will be a luncheon at the Statler Saturday, when the speaker will be Dr. Vannevar Bush, president of the Carnegie Institution of Washington and recently appointed chairman of the research and development board of the new Department of Air Force.

Chairman of arrangements for observance of National Business Women's Week is Miss Kathyrn Patricia Casey, who is assisted by Miss Gertrude Prisley, Mrs. Polly Parrott, Mrs. Mary-Agnes Brown, Miss Judy McFarland, Mrs. Gertrude Broderick and Mrs. Mildred Blaich.

Miss Sally Butler, national and international president of this organization of more than a quarter million members all over the world, has counseled her group:

"Keep alert to the times, use your privileges well, and work for a greater understanding and more effective handling of your responsibilities."

War Lecture Is Highlight Of Convention

A discussion by Jennings Randolph on "Can We Avoid World War III?" highlighted the two-day convention yesterday and today of the middle eastern area of Beta Sigma Phi sorority.

Mr. Randolph, former Representative from West Virginia and now assistant to the president of Capital Airlines, spoke at the dinner last night in Wardman Park Hotel, Continental Room. Miss Agnes Nemanich, general chairman of the meeting, presided.

Mrs. Virginia Ruggiero, president of New York City Beta Sigma Phi council, played several piano selections throughout the evening.

Party Precedes Dinner

Preceding the dinner there was a cocktail party in the Burgundy Room of the hotel.

Today's sessions will open with round-table discussions presided over by Miss Alice Shafer, president of the D. C. city council. Assisting her will be Mrs. Norman Smith, Miss Leah Moody, Miss Jean Roudebush, Miss Helen Rose, Miss Margaret Miller, Miss Minnetha Coe, Miss Aline Crossfield and Mrs. Alma M. Youse.

Mrs. Harold H. Burton, sponsor of the D. C. council and wife of the Supreme Court Associate Justice, and Miss Mary Bell Baker of the sorority's international field staff, will be special guests at the luncheon to follow.

seeds for the 113 children of the schools. And when Mrs. Macneil sailed early this summer she took with her hundreds of packets of flower seeds; a collection of herbs from the Washington Cathedral's famous herb garden and reams of literature on helpful hints for gardeners.

It must be that all the children of Barra are blessed with "green thumbs," for in their 14 by 14 garden plots they grow 14 varieties of vegetables.

To insure coordinated activity among the youngsters, Marie Macneil is responsible for the small Scottish advisory committee now being formed and for the Resident Director, a Mr. Summerford, British navy, who's a well-known writer on food and subjects pertaining to it.

TOWN TOPICS: Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin will return to town a week from tomorrow for the first Spanish class of the season, to meet in her apartment at the Shoreham. Judge and Mrs. Goodwin were in Newport during the summer months, then went to their home in Lake Forest for September.

Mrs. A. C. Burrows—Edith to her friends—famous for her own smart hats, is going to turn her ability into cash. She's designing hats from rare laces, old ivories, lush velvets and satins, each an original model with absolutely no copies to be made. Moreover, ther'll be a turn in value on your old chapeau for the materials and trimmings can be used again. Her New York opening will take place at the Sherry-Netherlands on October 23. She'll show her creations to her friends of the press in her apartment on Connecticut ave., from 4 to 8, p. m., October 14.

Down Virginia Way

By Nina Carter Tabb

OF interest throughout Virginia is the announcement of the marriage of Mrs. Helen Lipscomb Henderson of Leesburg, to Burdette Wright, jr., also of Leesburg, on September 26 at the Presbyterian Church in Berryville, the Rev. Paulette, rector of the church, officiatinng.

It was a quiet affair with only members of the families present. The bride wore a gray wool suit, trimmed with black baby lamb fur, a black hat trimmed with the same fur. Mr. and Mrs. Wright are now on a wedding trip to New York and Boston. They attended the races at Belmont Park last Saturday. Upon their return they will go to Clearwater Beach, Fla., to make their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Harris, jr., entertained Saturday afternoon at a party at their home, Stoke, near Aldie, following the christening of their two children. The Rev. Dunbar, rector of the Episcopal Church of Middleburg, officiated.

Godparents for Sandy Harris, jr. their oldest child, were Mrs. Rosalie Montague Littleton of Middleburg; Armistead Boothe of Alexandria, and William Moncure of Philadelphia. Their youngest child, Diani Truax, had as godparents, Mrs. T. F. Hammer of Stamford, Conn.; Mrs. Henry Crabites of Aldie and N. Holmes Morison, jr., of New York City, as the latter could not be present his brother, Southgate Morison of Baltimore, stood proxy.

A reception was held in honor of the godparents, when about a hundred relatives and friends of the family were invited in. Chauncey Brow's Orchestra furnished music for the occasion. Mrs. T. F. Hammer, William Moncure and Mrs. N. Holmes Morrison, jr., were weekend guests of Mr. and Mrs. Harris at Stoke.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Duffey and Miss Mabel Waddell of Middleburg entertained at a cocktail party on Friday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Duffey in honor of Miss Frances Cornelia Crouse and John Berkley Lee, jr., who were to be married in Washington on Saturday.

Mrs. Daniel C. Sands and Miss Charlotte H. Noland attended a dinner party in Alexandria on Tuesday evening given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Rollins at their home. Mr. and Mrs. Rollins took their guests later that evening to the play given at Gadsby's Tavern by the "Little Theater" of Alexandria. Others at Mrs. and Mrs. Rollins party included Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. James Metcalf, Miss Virgila Stephens and Miss Evelyn Dillard.

Miss Anne Cliffe Carter of Alexandria and Peter Knowles of Washington, whose engagement was recently announced, attended a house party last weekend given by her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Carter, near Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. James B. Skinner have sent out invitations to a dinner party on Friday evening at their Middleburg home in celebration of their thirty-fifth wedding anniversary.

Miss Gearing Is Married to Mr. Wickham

EIGHTEEN attendants were in the wedding party of Miss Margaret Halsey Gearing and Henry Taylor Wickham, who were married last night in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Alexandria, Va., the Rev. Thomas A. Fraser officiating.

The bride is the daughter of Comdr. Wallis Gearing, USN retired, and Mrs. Gearing, of Alexandria and a niece of Admiral and Mrs. William Halsey. The bridegroom, son of Mrs. Arthur C. Sinton of Richmond, Va., and the late George Lauderdale Wickham, is a grandson of the late Senator Henry Taylor Wickham of Hanover County, Va., and Mrs. Wickham.

Escorted by her father, the bride wore an Elizabethan wedding gown of white satin with Brussels lace bodice and matching lace veil. Her bouquet was of lilies of the valley, gardenias and stephanotis.

Miss Isabell Vanderkloot of Pasadena, Calif., attended her as maid of honor and bridesmaids were Mrs. Erwin W. Smith, Houston, Tex.; Mrs. Joyce Nesbitt, Murrells Inlet, S. C.; Miss Hortense Jones, Greensboro, N. C., and Miss Virginia C. Wickham of Richmond. All wore off-shoulder apple green faille with bustle back and carried gold and bronze dahlias. Miss Lucy Turner and Miss Margaret Spruance, junior bridesmaids, were costumed in white taffeta with oldfashioned bouquets of talisman roses.

Capt. Williams Carter Wickham, USN, served his nephew as best man. Ushers were Kenneth C. Royall, jr., Clarke Worthington, William W. Koontz, Howard Goodwin, Laurence Lewis, Laurence Gordon, James Woodson, Todd Dabney, John Cronly and Robert Carter.

The reception was held at the home of the bride's parents.

Miss Borden, Mr. de Murias Repeat Vows

WHITE gladioli and chrysanthemums decorated the Church of the Epiphany for the wedding yesterday of Miss Ann-Carlin Borden, daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. William Ayres Borden, and Ramon de Murias, son of Mrs. Fernando Enrique de Murias, of Babylon, Long Island, and the late Mr. de Murias. The ceremony at 4:30 was performed by the Rev Dr. Charles W. Sheerin and a small reception followed at the home of the bride's parents on Tracy Place.

MRS. RAMON de MURIAS
. . . Wears heirloom lace

General Borden gave his daughter in marriage. She wore an ivory satin gown made with pointed sleeves and a full circular train. Her veil arranged in mantilla fashion was of antique lace which had belonged to the bridegroom's grandmother, and was arranged over a full length veil of silk net. The bride carried an arm bouquet of gardenias.

Mrs. Hugh Blanchard Vickery and Mrs. Theodore Aley Ayers, sisters of the bride, were the two matrons of honor. Their gowns were of gray and chartreuse crepe, the skirts made of panels of the two shades. Their bouquets of deep blue delphinium matched the coronets in their hair.

Other attendants were Mrs. William Allen Knowlton and Miss Patricia Roberts, cousins of the bride, who wore costumes like those of the matrons of honor; and junior bridesmaids, Miss Jill Hollister Adams and Miss Elliott Adams also cousins of the bride.

Serving as best man was Samuel S. Bartlett of South Kent, Conn., and ushers included William Tyson Hayward, 3d, of Babylon, Long Island; Dereck W. Betts of Westhampton, N. Y.; Henry Dawbarn of Baltimore; John Dorsey of New York; Peter V. Snyder of Patchoque, Long Island, and Howard Aller, jr., and Henry Clay Moses, jr., both of New York.

Reception Is Held

Mrs. Borden, mother of the bride, who welcomed guests at the reception, wore a gray crepe gown with a blue hat and a corsage of gardenias. Mrs. De Murias, mother of the bridegroom, was unable to be present owing to a recent illness.

Mr. De Murias and his bride will go to Lima, Peru, on their wedding trip and will live in New York when they return several months hence.

The bride was graduated from the Madeira School, the Northampton School for Girls and Smith College. She is a member of the Junior League. A member of old Washington families, Mrs. De Murias is the granddaughter of Mrs. Samuel S. Adams and the late Dr. Adams and of the late Col. and Mrs. William Cline Borden.

Mr. De Murias is a graduate of Princeton University and Harvard Law School. His grandparents are the late Mr. and Mrs. Frederic S. Bunce of Babylon, Long Island, and the late Mr. and Mrs. Ramon de Murias of New York and Havana.

Preceding the wedding Mrs. John J. McCloy entertained at luncheon for the bridal party and out-of-town guests.

C. Douglass Buck, jr., Weds Miss Mary Biddle Sinclair

MISS MARY BIDDLE SINCLAIR, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Stephens Sinclair of Riverside, Conn., was married yesteray to Clayton Douglass Buck, jr., son of Senator from Delaware and Mrs. C. Douglass Buck. The wedding took place in Christ Church, Greenwich, Conn., the Rev. John J. Hawkins officiating, assisted by the Rev. Harvey L. Woolverton.

MRS. C. DOUGLASS BUCK, JR.
. . . Bride of Senator's son

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore an ivory white satin gown with sweetheart neckline and long sleeves. She wore a rosepoint veil and carried a cascade bouquet of roses, gardenias and stephanotis.

Miss Sylvia Buell Sinclair, sister of the bride and maid of honor, wore green velveteen and carried yellow roses and ivy leaves. The bridesmaids, Mrs. Donald Keith Farquhar, sister of the bridegroom; Miss Evelyn T. Price, Miss Grace F. Russell, Mrs. Charles C. Colt, Mrs. Barbara Ginn Helm, and Miss Katherine Bunker, wore green velveteen gowns and carried chrysanthemums and ivy leaves.

Senator Buck was best man for his son. The ushers were Paul E. Wilson, brother of the bridegroom; Donald Keith Farquhar, William E. Haible, of Boston; David M. Sinclair, brother of the bride; Warren G. Hunke, of Weehawken, N. J., and Sidney Scott, jr., of Wilmington.

Mrs. Buck was graduated from Westtown School, Westtown, Pa., and attended Bennington College. Mr. Buck attended the Hill School in Pottstown, Pa., and was graduated from Williams College. During the war he served with the Navy three years as a lieutenant (j.g.) on a mine sweeper in the Pacific.

Following the wedding, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Little Point, Riverside.

Mr. and Mrs. Buck will go to Bermuda on their wedding trip.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Deserted by Soldier Husband Who Never Saw Their Child Now 16 Months Old, Wife Dreads Time When Youngster Will Ask About Father

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My daughter Ruthie is now 16 months old, and already the youngsters in the neighborhood are asking where her daddy is. When she, too, is old enough to wonder and ask, I won't know what to tell her, for fear of the psychological effects.

Ours was a war-time romance and marriage, and my husband has never seen his daughter and probably never will. When he was discharged from the Army he didn't come home. He deserted us because he thought we were too much responsibility.

His character and habits changed drastically for the worse during his Army service, although the full evidence of this didn't overtake me until recently. He has never contributed a cent to the baby's support since quitting the Army and I'm convinced that he never will.

Please tell me what to say when Ruthie starts to ask about her daddy. If I tell her that he is living, mightn't she grow up with the feeling that she must find him? If I simply say that he didn't come back to us after the war, I'm sure that wouldn't suffice. I am counting on you to help me out.

E. F.

Avoid Tension In Discussion

DEAR E. F.: When Ruthie first asks about her daddy, give her a brief casual factual answer. For instance, if he were said to be in Detroit the last time you had word of his whereabouts, you should reply, "Daddy's in Detroit, I think."

To that Ruthie may say, "Why?"—the query most often used by a child of alert mentality. Then lightly, amiably, you might say, "Well, that's where he works, I think." Or, "Well, daddy was in the Army and then he went to Detroit to live."

Again Ruthie may offer a "Why?" or "Why didn't he come to live with us?" If she is less than three years of age when this quiz takes place, a proper adequate rejoinder for the time being would be: "Well, I don't know for sure; but I guess he just likes to live in Detroit."

Then in offhand manner change the subject by proposing some activity of interest to her. For instance, "Where are your crayons? Let's draw cats." Or, "Come, let mother brush your hair and change your dress; we'll walk to the store." Or, "Goodness, isn't dollie a mess; why don't you wash her face."

Parents' Attitude Determines Child's

IF YOUR attitude is natural and relaxed, her mind will drift away from thoughts of daddy and Detroit for an indefinite period; and subconsciously a comfortable acceptance of daddy's absence—copied from mother's treatment of the fact,—will have been established; even though as months and years pass she may recurrently probe the unusual circumstance until she has a knowing grasp of it.

The best you can do for her psychologically in tender years is to provide her unawarely with a positive confident unembarrassed answer to give to the question of daddy's whereabouts, by the time her play-association with other children begins. Thus your comment must be narrowed down to something explicit, as outlined above. It must not be vague, evasive or, on the other hand, painfully and confusingly detailed.

Instead of brooding about your husband's irresponsible behavior and feeling humiliated for self and child, think on "whatsoever things are good" in your experience; count your blessings every day, of food, shelter, raiment, friends, etc.; be a kind neighbor in your community, and in general practice habits of mental health as a means of nurturing the same in Ruthie. This will be her best protection against undue distress at her father's defection or morbid interest in his shadowy existence.

M. H.

Should parents try to discourage small children from using their left hands rather than their right? Miss Haworth tells a worried grandmother what she thinks about training "little southpaws" in her column tomorrow.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Washington Post.

Ask Anne

Your Questions On Homemaking

1. Will you tell me how to remove mildew from white artificial silk satin, made in Switzerland? I do not know whether it is the same as our rayon or not.

2. Can you tell me how to exterminate big, black cockroaches from a kitchen and basement?

3. The waterproof pads and mattresses of my baby's play pen and bed have been wet several times. I have sponged them with water, soap, and amphyl solution, but there is an odor about them and all the washing is spoiling the looks of the waterproof material. What can you suggest?

M. G. S.

1. I'm not familiar with the way the fabric you describe is made, but it should be safe to try the method for removing mildew from rayon. Do it as soon as possible, as mildew weakens the fibers if not treated while fresh. Wash thoroughly in soap and water, then dry in the sun to bleach the spots. If they prove stubborn, dampen the stains with water and dust with powdered sodium perborate. Let stand a minute or two, then rinse well with water.

2. Cockroaches have really been a trial this summer, what with all the damp weather. Spraying thoroughly with 5 per cent DDT solution or painting it on walls and floors, dusting with powder containing DDT or sodium fluoride, should prove effective. Put out plenty while you're at it. Be careful with the powder, however, if there are children or pets in your home. Sodium fluoride is poisonous if taken internally. DDT is also a mild poison, although the film the spray makes on walls and floors won't hurt youngsters, dogs and cats.

3. A good sunning is the best way to get rid of the odor in the pad and mattress. Wash them well first, then sun as often as possible. Such pads and mattresses are usually "water-repellent" rather than waterproof," which means that dampness may penetrate. For this reason, it's best to use a rubber sheet or plastic cover on them if possible.

Classes for Canines

Mr. Pooch Goes to School—

. . . To Get Out of Doghouse

By Marjorie Binford Woods

SCHOOL bells now ring for Mr. Pooch, who is getting educated at classes each Sunday afternoon at Equitation Field on Military rd. in Rock Creek Park.

When classes assemble the scholars, who are dogs and their owners, line up for lessons from teachers recruited from the Capital Dog Training Club of Washington, D. C., Inc.

Semesters last for about three months and to graduate and receive his C.P. degree a dog must demonstrate his good manners and obey commands of his mistress or master.

The school is not exclusive, the ancestry of its pupils is not gone into, fees are nominal as it operates on a nonprofit basis, and there is no age limit.

"It's a fallacy that you can't teach an old dog new tricks," Calvin Pierson of Hyattsville, the club president and training director, will tell you.

9-Year-Old Star Pupil

"We had a 9-year-old Dalmatian as a kindergartener in class training," he went on, "who turned out to be a prize-winning show dog and received his C.D. (Companion Dog) degree without any trouble at all."

The C.D. can be likened to a graduate degree since it is awarded by the American Kennel Club after a dog has successfully performed the same routine in three shows. The C.P. stands for Certificate of Proficiency and is given dogs who finish the basic training and learn to heel on and off the leash, to sit down, to stay down and to come when called.

"We believe in getting man's best friend out of the doghouse by teaching him good behavior through strict obedience," explains Mr. Pierson.

"Gremlin is true evidence that it can be done, too," says Miss Elizabeth B. Smith of the State Department, as she points to her perky little Welch terrier, who was "a biter, a fighter and a barker" when she fell heir to him several months ago. Now he stops barking on command, no longer bites deliverymen (or anyone) and gets no complaints from the neighbors.

"The little fellow belonged to four different owners and was shifted around from pillar to post before he came to me," she explained affectionately. "At one time in his young life his name had been changed to 'Sport' and he didn't know exactly who he was."

He has learned to feel secure in his new home, however; still has plenty of pep and spunk, but it's curbed, his dog trainer-mistress is proud to state.

Gremlin's little girl companion, a wire-haired show dog also belonging to Miss Smith, is 11-year-old Shalunya. "Her name means 'scalawag' in Russian, but she really is an angel," says her owner, who admits nevertheless that she has her hands plenty full keeping two terriers in tow under the same roof.

Have you ever had a yen to own one of these beautiful and rare Siberian husky thoroughbreds? Army Capt. Richard Garrett for many years has nurtured such a dream but expected to have to travel to Alaska to obtain one.

It's no wonder he treasures the day when he recently found 2-year-old Chornyi, a black and white beauty, right here in Washington. The near-champion bench-show dog already has won several blue ribbons and is being schooled for outstanding performance in the field.

Dog Is Teacher

"One can learn many things from a dog," Captain Garrett points out. While teaching "Chornyi" to high jump, he formerly put him through the paces as many as seven times in a row, until the usually-obedient pooch refused to jump.

"He knew better than I did, for high jumping takes a great deal out of a dog. Now I've learned from his common sense to put him over the jumps only two or three times a week, in our workouts," states this trainer who spends at least 2 hours nightly in routine work with his prize dog.

Few dogs, no matter how smart they are, ever get to go to college. But, Elochka, a Siberian husky, age 14 months, goes every day. Her mistress, Miss Helen Hillman, is a physical education teacher at American University and the two are constant companions.

Dog Goes to College

"Elochka always goes to classes with me and sits quietly on the sidelines while the students play basketball, tennis, go swimming, or whatever. She never creates a disturbance now that she's learning obedience in these Sunday classes," Miss Hillman says.

Rocket, a soulful-eyed cocker belonging to teen-age Anita Roberts, is another of the 2500 dogs which have been class-trained in the Capital Dog Training Club, formed originally in 1938.

His young mistress is proud that her puppy can now heel, off and on leash; comes when he is called and obeys her to the letter.

It takes time and patience to drum good manners and full obedience into a dog, the owners who were interviewed, agreed. All spend from 10 to 15 minutes daily with their animals in repetition training, besides the 1 or 2 hours of class-training which the dogs receive on Sundays. It is well worth the effort, however, these dog-lovers say, to have controlled and lovable pets—rather than pests—around the house.

"We train our dogs to be regular members of the family," says Mrs. Richard A. Wheeler of Dunrovin Farms, Va. Their handsome Great Dane, Colonel, which they believe to be the largest dog of its kind in the country, was brought up on affection, repetition of command for obedience, and a strong feeling of security in "home," Mrs. Wheeler explains.

Colonel's constant companion on their farm is a kind-hearted boxer called Major, who recognizes a "superior" when he sees one in the dog kingdom and never dares pick a fight.

GREMLIN was an incorrigible Welch terrier puppy who barked, bit and was declared a public nuisance by his neighbors before Miss Elizabeth B. Smith took him in tow and taught him obedience. But just look at him now—docile as a lamb, lapping up praise which his mistress is doling out to him after a successful high jump

Miss Florence Crawford Married to Mr. Marvil

Miss Florence Morrison Crawford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Crawford of Washington, was married at 3 o'clock yesterday to Frederick Linwood Marvil, jr., son of Mrs. Charles Henry Wier of Wilmington, Del.

The Rev. Peter Marshall officiated at the ceremony at New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore white satin trimmed in lace and a veil of French illusion held in place by orange blossom clusters. She carried a white prayerbook and gardenias.

The attendants were the bride's sister, Mrs. Reed Miller, as matron of honor, wearing American beauty faille and carrying pink roses; Miss Joan Palmer of Evanston, Ill., the maid of honor, who wore dusty rose faille and carried American beauty roses, and Miss Barbara Stellwagon and Mrs. Harvey S. Dwight, the maids, who were dressed as the maid of honor. They all wore velvet bands, matching their dresses, in their hair.

William Booth, jr., of Salisbury, Md., was best man and the ushers were Robert D. Grier, 3d, of Salisbury, William Nevins of Long Island, N. Y., Allen Wielden of Washington and Thomas E. Schneider, jr., of Atlanta.

A small reception was held at the Admiral Club. The couple will live in Washington after a honeymoon to Sea Island, Ga.

The bride attended Mary Washington College at Fredericksburg, Va., and George Washington University where she was a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority.

Mr. Marvil attended Maryland State Teachers College, later serving for five years as a Naval aviator during the war. He was discharged with the rank of lieutenant commander. He is now studying at George Washington University.

Tricks for Teens

By Nancy Pepper

Better start saving up now, because you're bound to join at least one club, in or out of school, for which you have to buy a special club pin. Hearing that thousands of you teens write in to the manufacturers of club jewelry every year for special designs, we visited one of the biggest producers in the country for the "Hi" low-down.

He's got a million of 'em!—Well, to be exact, this particular manufacturer keeps 20,000 designs of club pins in his files. For each design he has a separate metal dye, all ready to stamp out more pins at a minute's notice (plus cash or money order, please). His collection includes everything from insignia of national fraternities to those of fan clubs.

FAN FUN—Movie fan clubs are always writing in for special pin designs. For instance, this particular manufacturer showed us a darling June Bug pin that is the official insigne of the June Allyson Fan Clubs. And guess what fan club has a tiny golden bow tie for a pin design.

SPEAK NO GREEK—Lots of schools have banned Greek letter pins unless they represent actual national sororities or fraternities. For your own private clubs you'll have to say it in English.

RING LEADERS—Because it always makes a girl look so popular to wear a boy's ring around her neck on a chain or ribbon, lots of girls' clubs and sororities have been ordering man-size rings for their club insignias. When you ask about them (and they hope you will), they just look mysterious and let you think the worst—or the best. Well, stuff my mouth with cotton, if that isn'a a gag!

Prom Problem

It was in Duluth, Minn., that a group of high school queens complained to us about the custom of dancing only with their own dates at a school prom. Since no boys are admitted without dates, there are no Stags lurking around to break the monotony and monoply. And it seems that the old custom of exchanging dances beforehand on dance cards has gone out in that city with the Turkey Trot and the Antimacassar. (If you know what an "Antimacassar' 'is you get the Triple Malted with the Root Beer chaser). These Duluth teens intend to do something about this grim situation, but they haven't worked out the details yet. Got any suggestions? Or do you suffer from the same complaint?

Point of View

I can't see anything in her——
When she talks, she's loud and screechy;
Her figure could be thinner,
And her hair looks sort of bleachy.
Why any boy should pin her——
(And I bet that she has twenty!)
I can't see anything in her——
BUT MY FAVORITE JOE SEES PLENTY!

TRIXIE TEEN SAYS—

The size of the town you live in should not determine the size of your ambitions. A girl can set just as big a goal for herself on Main Street as she can on Broadway and she doesn't necessarily have to leave Main Street to attain it. It isn't where you are that counts; it's what you are and what you want to be. Just because you live in a small town doesn't mean that you can't have big ideas.

Lyons—Aydt

Miss Mary Jane Aydt became the bride of James Paul Lyons in a double-ring ceremony followed by a nuptial mass in the Church of Our Lady of Victory at 10 a. m. yesterday. The Rev. J. Gerard Cole officiated.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Aydt and was given in marriage by her father. Mr. Lyons is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph J. Lyons of Jackson Heights, N. Y.

The bride was attired in ivory satin made with an off-the-shoulder neckline filled in with a yoke of marquisette. She wore the heirloom lace veil of her grandmother and carried white roses and orchids.

Miss Ruth Nelson of Ashland, Ohio, was maid of honor, wearing gold moire taffeta made bustle style. Miss Grace McGrath of Washington, who was bridesmaid, was similarly dressed in hunter's green. Both carried colonial bouquets of bronze and yellow chrysanthemums and wore matching coronets in their hair.

Vincent Marino was best man and the ushers were Edward Hopwood and Vernon Kennedy.

Keenan—Kerr

Miss Mary Elizabeth Kerr, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Kerr of Elkins, W. Va., was married to Robert Garrett Keenan, son of Mrs. John Keenan of Washington and the late Judge Keenan yesterday at the Church of the Nativity. The Rev. Thomas C. McLeod of Philadelphia, Pa., officiated and a reception was held afterward at the home of the bridegroom, 2232 Q st.

The bride wore white satin fashioned with a sweetheart neckline and court train worn with a veil of Brussels lace. She carried white roses and stephanotis.

Miss Mary Alyce Harmon, wearing deep rose taffeta, was maid of honor.

Col. Gregory F. Keenan was best man and Richard Kerr and John J. Keenan, jr., were ushers.

The bride attended Potomac State College. She is secretary to the assistant vice president of Western Union Telegraph Co. The bridegroom attended St. John's Academy and Manhattan College. He served as an officer with the 13th Army Air Force in the Pacific during the war.

Van Allen—Wright

In a candlelight service at the home of her parents at 7:30 last evening Miss Dorothy A. Wright, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clare A. Wright of Arlington, became the bride of William Allen Van Allen, son of Mrs. A. M. Van Allen and the late Mr. Van Allen of Mount Pleasant, Iowa. The Rev. Gilbert A. Phillips officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore white satin with a veil of illusion and carried a shower arrangement of white roses and bouvardia.

Mrs. Allan Fay served her cousin as matron of honor, wearing a gown of blue and silver with talisman roses. Gordon Bloomquist of Washington was best man.

After a wedding trip the couple will live in Boston.

Parsell—Chapman

Miss Ruth Georgiana Chapman was married to John Foster Parsell at 4 yesterday afternoon at St. Paul's Rock Creek Episcopal Church with the Rev. Charles W. Wood officiating. Mrs. Parsell is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Chapman of Chillum, Md., and her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Parsell of Mount Rainier, Md.

Mr. Chapman gave his daughter in marriage. She wore white satin made with a yoke of nylon marquisette and with a flaring skirt. Her finger-tip veil was held in place by a tiara of hand-tatted lace and the same lace trimmed her dress. She carried white orchids on her prayer book.

Miss Virginia Giles was maid of honor wearing American Beauty red satin made with a fitted bodice with a bustle bow at the hipline. The maids, who wore similar dresses in forest green, were Miss Margaret Chapman and Mrs. Robert Nine, the bride's sisters, and Miss Edna Gilbert. They wore net headdresses and carried chrysanthemums.

David Parsell, brother of the bridegroom, was best man and the ushers were the bride's brother, George Chapman, and Donald Marsico and James Suite, jr.

Barger—Orem

Miss Catherine Mae Orem, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Leonard Orem of Washington, became the bride of Edwin A. Barger, also of Washington, yesterday at the Church of the Nativity, the Rev. Lawrence A. McGlone officiating.

Mr. Orem gave his daughter in marriage and she was attended by her sister, Mrs. Robert J. Heberle of Richmond, Va. George Stanley Barger of Raleigh, N. C., was best man for his brother.

Miss Edith Looker Is Bride

Bradford-Bachrach

MRS. A. H. MITCHELL, JR.
. . . Marries in Alexandria

Miss Edith Beaumont Looker became the bride of Arthur Hayne Mitchell, jr., at 4:30 p. m. yesterday at Emmanuel Episcopal Church in Alexandria, Va. She is the daughter of Mrs. Reginald Earle Looker of Alexandria and her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, sr., of Greenwood, Va.

The Rev. William Macbeth officiated, and the bride's great uncle, Reginald B. Looker, gave her in marriage. She wore ivory satin, made with a heart-shaped neckline, leg-o'-mutton sleeves and a long, full skirt. She wore a veil of illusion with a cap of heirloom lace and carried an orchid surrounded by white roses.

Miss Karen Looker, who was her sister's only attendant, wore a period gown of peacock blue moire with a matching hat and carried yellow roses.

Lloyd Austin Beall Mitchell was his brother's best man and the ushers were the bridegroom's cousin, Harold Harriman Lane, of Geneva, N. Y., the bride's cousin, Reginald B. Looker, jr., of Rockville, Md., and Andrew C. Armstrong and Thomas M. Behrendt of Charlottesville, Va.

A reception followed the ceremony in the library of St. Agnes' Episcopal Church.

Mr. Mitchell is the great-granddaughter of the late Admiral Thomas H. Looker of Georgetown, and the great-niece of Miss Bertha H. Looker and Mrs. Paul Bartlett. She was graduated from Northampton School for Girls and attended Connecticut College for Women. Mr. Mitchell is a great-grandson of the late Col. Lloyd James Beall of Richmond. He served as a pilot in Army Air Forces during the war.

MRS. ROBERT E. BRESNAHAN
. . . To live at Silver Spring

Bresnahan—Merendino

In St. John's Catholic Church yesterday Miss Rosalie Vivian Merendino, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Anthony Merendino, became the bride of Robert Emmit Bresnahan of Silver Spring, Md. The ceremony took place at 5 o'clock and a reception followed at the Lafayette Hotel.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of ivory satin, fashioned with sweetheart neckline and long train. Her veil of illusion fell from a wreath of seed pearls, and she carried a bouquet of gardenias and stephanotis.

After a wedding trip to Atlantic City, the couple will make their home at 9600 Bruce dr., Silver Spring.

Farquhar—Jennings

Miss Ann Randolph Jennings, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Witt Jennings of Glen Ferris, W. Va., was married yesterday to Norman Farquhar, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Douglas Farquhar of Sandy Spring, Md. The wedding took place in St. Mark's Episcopal Church, the Rev. William C. Bowie officiating.

The bride wore an off-the-shoulder gown of ivory satin, with tight bodice and full skirt ending in a long train. Her fingertip veil was trimmed with bouvardia, and she carried a cascade bouquet of white orchids and bouvardia.

Mr. and Mrs. Farquhar will reside in Washington.

Norman—Hurd

Miss Beverly Mae Hurd was married to William David Norman at Lewis Memorial Church at 2 p. m. yesterday. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard O. Hurd, sr., of this city and her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Norman of West Virginia.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore white satin beaded in white and pale pink seed pearls. Her veil fell from a seed pearl tiara and she carried a prayer book with orchids and lilies of the valley.

The bride's sister-in-law, Mrs. Howard O. Hurd, jr., served as matron of honor wearing American beauty shade moire taffeta and carrying American Beauty roses. The bridesmaids, Misses Iola Belfield and Mary Jo Bussey, were similarly dressed in hyacinth blue. Miss Mary Jane Barbrow was flower girl, wearing white taffeta.

Howard O. Hurd, jr., the bride's brother, was best man and the ushers were Richard Jordan and Robert Garner.

Hall—Gass

Walter Reed Memorial Chapel was the scene of the wedding yesterday of Miss Mary Elinor Gass, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Henderson Gass of Washington, and Lieut. William Charles Hall, USA, son of Karl W. Hall and the late Mrs. Hall of Cherokee, Iowa. Chaplain John A. Dunn officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore ivory satin made with a fitted bodice and off-the-shoulder neckline edged in satin folds. Her veil of illusion fell from a Mary Queen of Scots headdress and she carried white roses and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Berkley C. Fling, cousin of the bride, dressed in Nile green satin and carrying bronze and yellow chrysanthemums, was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Misses Geraldine Wright and Beverly Ann Dillon wearing cinnamon satin and carrying yellow chrysanthemums. All wore matching Mary Queen of Scots headdresses.

Lieut. Jerry D. Bowman, USA, was best man and the ushers were Capt. Charles Blaha, Lieut. Robert J. Hefferon, Lieut. Edward J. Nessley and Lieut. Duward, E. Benton, all Army officers.

After a reception at the Walter Reed Officers' Club the couple left for a honeymoon in Florida. They will live in Dover, N. J., where the bridegroom is stationed.

Mrs. Hall was graduated from Immaculata Seminary and attended Holton-Arms School. Lieutenant Hall attended California Tech before entering U. S. Military Academy from which he was graduated.

Roper—Klock

Miss Elizabeth Klock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Klock of Frackville, Pa., became the bride of Alfred Berdanier Roper, gunner's mate, first class, USN, of Washington, September 21 at St. Peter's Reformed Church in Frackville.

Escorted by her father, the bride wore white satin trimmed with lace. Her veil was held by a coronet of flowers and she carried white gladiodi.

Miss Jeannette Eyster of Frackville, the maid of honor, wore rose taffeta, and Miss Beatrice Quintan of Dover, Del., the bridesmaid, wore emerald green. They had bouquets and coronets of gladiodi.

Paul A. Roper of Washington was his brother's best man and Robert A. Berdanier, cousin of the bridegroom, of Frackville, and Forrest G. Roper, USN, another brother of the bridegroom, were ushers.

Jones—Stock

The Rev. Walter F. Stock officiated at the marriage of his daughter, Miss Esther Minnie Stock, to Louis Earl Jones at Trinity Lutheran Church yesterday. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Jones of this city.

The bride, given in marriage by her cousin, Ralph Schmidt of Ashland, Ky., wore white slipper satin made with a net yoke, fitted bodice, and the long skirt ending in a train. Her veil was caught with orange blossom clusters and she carried white roses, stephanotis and forget-me-nots.

Mrs. Ralph Barbour of Ashland, Ky., was matron of honor costumed in white moire made with a fitted bodice and full skirt. The bridesmaids, dressed in the same fashion, were Miss Mena Jones, sister of the bridegroom, Miss Wilma Leedy of Ashland, Ky., and Washington, and Misses Helen, Martha, Dorothy and Mildred Stock, all sisters of the bride. They wore white feather headdresses and carried talisman roses and yellow mums.

Leonard Jones was best man for his brother and the ushers were Emmett Milstead, Harry Jones, Charles Horvath and Mickey Sanderson.

A reception was held in the Georgian Room of the Hotel Sheraton after which the couple left for a wedding trip to New York and through the East.

The bride attended Ashland Junior College and Mr. Jones was educated in Washington. He served four years in the Navy and is now in business in the Capital.

Mrs. Maitland M. Cole Is Bride of A. C. Minnix, Jr.

Mrs. Maitland Macdonald Cole and Allen Clark Minnix, jr., were married in the Bethlehem Chapel of Washington Cathedral at 12:30 yesterday. Dr. Charles W. Lowry officiated in the presence of the two families.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm A. Macdonald and is the widow of Lieut. E. Hunter Cole, USAAF, who was killed in action in 1943.

Mr. Minnix is the son of Mrs. Hazel Colton Minnix and of Allen C. Minnix.

Mrs. Minnix was gowned in blue and silver wool and she carried an old fashioned bouquet. She was given in marriage by her father.

Mrs. Edward A. Beard served as matron of honor, wearing beige wool with brown accessories and carrying autumn flowers.

The couple will live at Chevy Chase following a wedding trip

In Bridal Procession

In a double-ring ceremony at 9 a. m. yesterday, Miss Dorothy Ruth O'Donnell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. O'Donnell of Arlington, Va., became the bride of Leonard E. McCarty, son of Mr. and Mrs. John A. McCarty of Trenton, N. J.

The wedding took place at a nuptial mass at St. Charles' Catholic Church at Arlington. A reception followed at Hotel 2400.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore white satin trimmed in lace. Her finger-tip veil of illusion was held by a coronet of seed pearls. She carried white roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Alyce Corriveau was maid of honor, wearing blue faille, and Miss Doris Jacobson, cousin of the bride, was bridesmaid, wearing pink faille. Both wore headpices matching the color of their gowns and carried old-fashioned bouquets.

Arthur Carey was best man and Frank Evoski and Francis Rokoski were ushers.

Kettler—Walker

Miss Barbara Elizabeth Walker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Forest Walker of Gaithersburg, Md., was married yesterday to Milton E. Kettler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Kettler of Washington. The wedding took place in Grace Methodist Church, Gaithersburg, at 4 p. m. The Rev. Karl G. Newell officiated, and a reception followed at the home of the bride.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of ivory brocade satin. Her long veil fell from a tiara of seed pearls, and she carried a bouquet of gardenias and stephanotis.

Mrs. Robert M. Walker, sister-in-law of the bride and matron of honor, was clad in gold satin and carried a bouquet of mixed colors. The other attendants, Mrs. James F. Walker of Chevy Chase and Mrs. Boyette Edwards, jr., of Park Ridge N. J., wore gowns of moss green satin and also carried bouquets of mixed colors.

Charles L. Kettler of Arlington, brother of the bridegroom, served as best man. Clarence E. Kettler of Ann Arbor, Mich., James F. Walker jr., of Chevy Chase, Earl Russell of Washington and Kenneth Crippen of Chicago, Ill., were ushers.

The bride was graduated from Penn Hall Junior College and the bridegroom from the University of Michigan. After a wedding trip to Florida, the couple will make their home in Washington.

Quinn—Burgan

Miss Dorothy Rose Burgan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred George Burgan of Washington, and Edward George Quinn, son of Mrs. John Quinn of Washington and the late Mr. Quinn, were married yesterday at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart. The Rev. Elmer T. Fisher officiated, and a reception followed at Hotel 2400.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white satin with bustle back and circular train. Her fingertip veil fell from a coronet of seed pearls and she carried white roses and bouvardia. The maid of honor, Miss Mary Louise Burgan, wore American Beauty taffeta, and Miss Mary Lou Leonard, bridesmaid, wore cornflower blue taffeta. Both attendants carried white mums.

George Quinn was best man, and the ushers were Elmer Burgan, Harold Quinn, Wilfred Burgan and John Quinn

After a wedding trip to the Poconos and New York City, the couple will make their home in Congress Heights.

Wm. Kuether and Miss Tyrrell Wed

Miss Dorothy Alicia Tyrrell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Bryant Tyrrell of Takoma Park, Md., became the bride of William Kuether of Hamilton, Ohio, September 20, at Northminster Presbyterian Church of this city.

The bridegroom is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. F. C. Kuether of Hamilton. He received his master's degree from Michigan State College and is working for his doctor's degree at University of Illlinois.

Mrs. Kuether was graduated with a degree in chemistry from Michigan State Teachers College.

The couple will live at Urbana, Ill.

Christenings On Calendar At Leesburg

Leesburg, Va., Oct. 4.—Water from the River Jordan was used in the christening services on Saturday of John Edward Russell, jr., 1-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Edward Russell, of Purcellville. The water was brought from Jerusalem by the baby's father when he was serving with the armed forces in that area. The bowl containing the water had been used for four generations in the family of his paternal grandmother for this purpose.

The service was at the Church of Our Savior, Oatlands, the Rev. D. C. Mayers officiating. The godparents are Albert F. Anderson, of Purcellville; J. Rupert Mohler, of Washington, and Mrs. John J. McLaughlin, of Purcellville. A luncheon at the home of the baby's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Russell, at Oatlands, preceded the christening services. Only the immediate families were present at the luncheon.

Christening services for Mary Brent Bullock, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Bullock of Seaford, Del., took place in St. James' Episcopal Church, Leesburg, on Saturday afternoon.

God Parents Named

The godparents were Miss Mary S. Rust, sister of Mrs. Bullock; Miss Byrd Michaux of Richmond and Douglass Phillips of Washington.

Following the services, a tea was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. David N. Rust, near Leesburg, parents of Mrs. Bullock, for the immediate families and guests from Washington and Alexandria. Among those present were the baby's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. William Bullock, sr., of Swarthmore, Pa.

Mr. and Mrs. Hayden B. Harris entertained at their apartment in New York at dinner on Wednesday evening for Col. and Mrs. Robert H. Fletcher of Leesburg, who sailed the following day on the SS Mauretania for France where they will spend several months.

Mrs. Jones Lawson was hostess on Friday afternoon to members of Section B, Woman's Auxiliary of St. James' Episcopal Church.

Guests at Hot Springs

Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Mason are spending 10 days at Hot Springs, Va. Col. and Mrs. E. W. Clark are visiting in Princess Anne, Md. Mrs. E. H. Heaton spent the weekend with Dr. and Mrs. H. O. Shackelford in Purcelville.

Mr. and Mrs. Beverly Duer are occupying their cottage at Woodburn while repairs are being made at their residence there, where they will make their permanent home.

Wm. O. Spears Have Reunion For Weekend

REAR ADMIRAL and Mrs. William O. Spears have been enjoying a weekend of family reunioning, sports and partying. Down from Fairfield, Conn., Friday came their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Morton F. Spears. Yesterday the foursome drove over to Annapolis where they joined Comdr. and Mrs. William O. Spears, jr., and attended the Navy-Columbia football game, winding up the day with dinner and dancing at the North Severn Club.

NEW ADDITIONS to Capital Navy circles are Capt. and Mrs. Malen Durski and their teenage daughter, Judy Jo, who were lucky enough to acquire a house almost immediately at 316 East Mason ave., Alexandria. Captain Durski, formerly commanding officer of the Naval Receiving Station at Seatle, Wash., is attending the War College and dark-haired Judy Jo is already settled at Holton Arms, where she is a boarding student. And Mrs. Durski, the former Romayne Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arhtur Jones, is reveling in her first glimpse in 10 years of the town where she spent much of her childhood.

THE MDW Officers' Wives Club has planned an afternoon of bingo to follow its second luncheon meeting Thursday at the War College Club. Reservations may be made with Mrs. B. C. Andrus, DE. 6311; Mrs. W. H. Tinsley, CH. 3000, ext. 3166, or Mrs. R. A. Davenport, CH. 3000, ext. 3193.

First meeting of the Air Forces Woman's Club—in case the name throws you, it's the old Air Corps Woman's Club brought up to date—is scheduled for 1:45 p. m. Wednesday at the Bolling Field Officers' Club. Speakers for the season will be Gen. W. E. Todd, Mrs. Richard Lindsay and Mrs. Edward P. Foote, who will tell of their experiences in Russia, Japan and Germany, respectively. Tea will be served.

New Communities Planned to Ring Capital

By Conrad P. Harness

LOCAL builders are ringing the District with a belt of new communities under contruction, or planned, on vast acreages in nearby Maryland and Virginia.

The trend will find favor with prospective home owners who want to get out of the city and into the suburbs.

High prices charged for vacant land in the District, plus a scarcity of land in blocks large enough to house big developments, has led promotors and planners to move their base of operations to nearby counties.

New "cities" already announced include a 2300-acre site near Springfield, Va., to be developd by Edward R. Carr and associates. Carr recently declared that the development will contain all classes of housing, plus apartments, commercial and industrial areas.

Others making recent headlines include the 600-home Twinbrook project, between Silver Spring and Rockville, Md.; Viers Hill Village, 1400 home project around Viers Mill rd., Silver Spring; Claremont, 400 homes, plus apartments, in South Arlington under way by Gerald Freed and the Claremont Construction Corp.

The newest community to be announced is "Washington Estates," located on a 330 acre tract at District Heights, in Prince Georges County, Md.

Also Plans Apartments

THERE, a firm headed by Nathaniel B. Rosoff, son of Samuel Rosoff, famed contractor and subway builder, plans to construct 1200 private dwellings, plus 750 to 1000 garden type apartment units.

The new community will be nearly as large as the existing District Heights itself.

To service this huge community, Rosoff and his associates plan to erect complete shopping center covering an estimated 20 acres. The center will include the usual shops in such projects, plus a theater and a community building housing the offices of Washington Estates, Inc.

Construction quietly began last May on the first 100 homes of the proposed 1200. These initial units are expected to be ready for occupany around November 1, providing the county completes the sewer line before that date.

The dwellings are of four basic types, but the builders have planned the development so there is a distinct variety in the exteriors. No two homes of like exteriors are in the same area.

Tentative prices, Rosoff declared, will range from $11,250 to $12,750 for the two-bedroom, ex-

STREET scene at Washington Estates, 330-acre housing development in nearby District Heights, Md., shows three new homes nearing completion. Homes at left and right are identical in floor plan but architect has used different exterior building materials to achieve variation. Homes are tentatively priced from $11,750 up. Finished stairways lead to expansion attics. The developer also plans 750 to 1000 garden type apartments and a commercial shopping center in the area

Collins Buys Club Property

The "Wellwood Country and Yacht Club" on Chesapeake Bay at Charlestown, Md., is under new management, according to Previews Inc., real estate firm. H. H. Collins purchased the 11-acre property, advertised at $75,000, from William M. Young.

Established 30 years ago by a group of 20 wealthy sportsmen, "Wellwood" has become a mecca for correspondents and political figures. Calvin Coolidge and Franklin D. Roosevelt stayed there.

The "Ebony Bar" in one of the cocktail lounges came from the White House—a gift of President Theodore Roosevelt.

All the club's 22 main bedrooms are named for various States and cities. Each contains a framed letter from a particular mayor or governor who occupied it. The establishment's three main buildings accommodate 100 guests at one time. Wellwood has its own duck blinds, concrete swimming pool, and 500-foot dock with anchorage for yachts of all sizes.

FHA Aid Sought For 2396 Projects

Applications for insured financing of 2396 rental housing projects, providing nearly 100,000 dwelling units for World War II veterans and their families, have been received so far this year by FHA, Commissioner Franklin D. Richards has announced.

The projects are to be financed with loans amounting to approximately 750 million dollars. On September 1 work had actually been started on 595 projects containing 23,118 dwelling units. It is expected that construction of the balance will commence during the next few months.

Newark Man Heads Mortgage Bankers

Cleveland, Oct. 4.—John C Thompson, president of the New Jersey Realty Co., of Newark, was elected president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America at the thirty-fourth annual convention here. He succeeds Guy Hollyday, of Baltimore.

G. Calvert Bowie, of Washington, D. C., was a member of the nominating committee. Bowie was elected to the Association's board of governors. His term will end in 1951.

Home Show Opens Here Next Saturday

The National Guard Armory will be the scene of feverish activity all this week as 163 exhibitors participating in the first annual Home-Show Exposition ready their booths for the show's opening next Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington, sponsors, said 20,000 tickets had already been sold to the affair from the ticket booth at the Association's model house on display on 14th st. near the District Building.

The 100,000 mark in visitors to the model home was reached yesterday, according to Larry Hansen, Association executive-secretary.

Exhibits at the exposition will feature the newest products for the home. The show runs from October 11 through 19. If you are interested in what's new in the home building or home appliance field, and who isn't, you will find your answers at the various exhibits, the sponsors claim.

There will be 15 educational displays among the 163 exhibits, including several Government agencies, the local chapter of the American Institute of Architects and the board of trade.

Historic Woodlawn Listed for Sale

"WOODLAWN," historic 127-acre estate below Mount Vernon which George Washington gave to his adopted granddaughter, Nelly Custis, as a wedding present, has been put up for sale for $250,000, it was learned yesterday.

George Washington was said to have sketched some of the plans for the house. These specifications were so exact that Dr. William Thornton, then architect of the Nation's Capitol, used them as a basic for final designs of the home.

The estate's gardens have changed little in the 150 years since Washington laid them out and thousands have admired them on days the showplace has been open to visitors.

Of 8800 Bought Through VA

270 GI 'Dream' Homes Turn Into Nightmares

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

ABOUT 270 veterans in the Greater Washington Area have discovered, to their dismay, that their "dream homes" have developed a few nightmarish aspects.

The regional office of the Veterans' Administration reported this week that 270 former servicemen, out of 8800 who have purchased homes under the GI Bill, have filed written complaints that their newly purchased homes do not measure up to promised standards.

In most cases, Morgan B. Callahan, loan guaranty officer here, has remedied the shortcomings by contacting the builder.

Col. Waldron E. Leonard, head of the Veterans Service Center, reported receipt of from 35 to 50 similar complaints during the summer, most of which were adjusted when the builder was contacted.

Complaints were few up to this summer. The summer season saw torrential rains which caused leaky basements and lawn erosion.

In most cases basements required rewaterproofing, usually accomplished after Callahan's staff contacted the builder, if he was a "reputable dealer."

Bad Apple Spoils Barrel

BUT there were others—"shoestring operators and fly-by-night men to whom reputation means nothing," who failed to repair the damages. Their usual tactic was procrastination, hoping to weary the veteran into dropping his claims, Callahan explained.

"Many victims — about 75 per cent—were veterans who as soon as the roof is on and the water running, beg and plead with the builder to let them get in," Callahan said. "Then when they do, the builder gets dilatory about doing all the little things required."

Callahan had this advice to offer the home-buying veteran:

1. Don't buy unless you have to.
2. Houses are sold on the principle of "caveat emptor—let the buyer beware."
3. See VA before you get into trouble—prevention of trouble is easier than its cure.
4. Do not move in until the house is entirely completed.
5. Check the reliability of your builder and real estate firm.

Callahan, himself a veteran of World War I, noted that "the purchase of a home will be the biggest and most important single investment of a lifetime for the majority of veterans, so they should look over all angles carefully before risking their savings and obligating themselves for a long period of years."

If homes are built with the assistance of a VA-approved loan appraisers are required to make a final check of the home before issuing a final certificate of guarantee. Funds are held in escrow to cover work still pending when the inspection is made.

A reputable builder, anxious to obtain VA approval on subsequent projects, is usually interested in showing the agency that he has carried out the contract terms satisfactorily.

The blame in some complaints lies with the veteran, Callahan explained. He said veterans purchasing new homes should realize that builders are often forced to use "green" lumber, which may result in warped floors, and that plaster

Ten Thousand Cities and Towns To Observe Fire Prevention Week

To combat fire losses citizens in more than 10,000 cities, towns and villages throughout the Nation will observe Fire Prevention Week, beginning October 5.

President Truman's annual Fire Prevention Week proclamation, issued at the White House on August 14, called upon the American people to observe the week "with the objective of initiating a fire prevention campaign continuing throughout the year."

Governors of several States have issued their annual Fire Prevention Week proclamations calling on their citizens to join fire safety efforts in their States.

Throughout the Nation, local civic groups will take the lead in Fire Prevention Week activities. chambers of commerce, service clubs, local chapters of the American Red Cross, the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, 4-H clubs, business and labor organizations will initiate programs.

Construction Boom Is Here, Council Told

The long-awaited boom in home building has arrived, Edward R. Carr, Washington builder and president of the National Association of Home Builders, said Friday.

He addressed the annual meeting of the Producers' Council in New York.

He told the group that builders were erecting houses at the rate of 330 an hour across the Nation for each eight-hour day.

He based his statement on Bureau of Labor Statistics which showed that 80,100 new dwellings were started in July and 83,000 in August.

Carr lashed back at critics who claim that present day home building methods are out-of-date.

"I wish people who talk so glibly about inefficiency and archaic methods in home building could see some of the things making production soar. New methods are used not by just the big fellows who build a thousand or so houses at a clip but by the smaller builders providing the bulk of veterans housing.

"Across the country you can see ditch-digging machines, concrete trucks pouring ready-mixed cement, skill saws, table saws, planes, routers and other mechanized methods being used in production lines that are yielding more houses every day than the world has ever seen.

"No one can say that our industry is not in high gear in production."

Iowan Builds Self a Home Of Kindling

By Hal Boyle

BURLINGTON, Iowa, Oct. 4 (AP). E. C. Etchinson, 64, didn't let the housing shortage get him down—he went to work and singlehanded built a brand new home 45 blocks long and 33 blocks wide.

Neighbors called it the "Kindlelow," because it is a bungalow made from kindling.

Etchinson constructed his dwelling from 8-inch square blocks sold by a local lumber yard as firewood. Two years ago Etchinson learned that the lumber yard had thousands of good white pine blocks—purchased originally by a huge ordnance plant here for use in shipping ordnance parts. Etchinson decided to build a "block house" when the lumber yard offered him all he wanted at $6 to $8 a ton.

He began August, 1945, working in his spare time.

Two years and 26,000 blocks later—he used 22 tons altogether—he had a complete three-room house, garage, brooder and henhouse for 100 chickens.

His "Kindelow" is a home many a young bride, weary of cramped wartime housing, would love.

"I designed the place as I went along," said Etchinson. "The only help I had was from my wife. There wasn't any waste. Blocks that couldn't be used for building made good firewood."

Among novel features of the "Kindleow," which measures 22 by 30 feet, is a cement roof. Etchinson, a cement finisher, rebelled against conventional roofing because of its expense.

"The cement roof is standing up well," he said, "and we don't have to worry about the block walls warping. The wood is well seasoned. The house'll last as long as we have any need of it."

The blocks were cemented and nailed together. Sanded, stained and varnished, they made a beautiful parquet floor. Etchinson doesn't think his "Kindelow" will ever really be finished. He still has a pile of several hundred blocks and wants now to add a front and back porch and other units.

He estimated he had spent between $2000 and $3000 on the house and its buildings.

pansion attic homes. The four-bedroom, two-bath houses will carry a $14,500 price tag. The builder emphasized that prices are still tentative and subject to change.

Both the FHA and Veterans' Administration are studying the homes for insured mortgage approval and loan guarantee purposes. The VA will appraise the homs and issue a price which they consider the worth to a veteran. They will guarantee up to $4000 of this amount if a veteran purchases.

Staff Loaded With Vets

ALL HOMES have a partial basement, fireplace in the living room and hardwood floors. Lots vary upwards from 55 by 120 feet, with a minimum of 6000 square feet. Lots will be landscaped and sodded, Rosoff stated.

Veterans dominate the staff of Washington Estates, Inc. Rosoff is a Marine Corps alumni; Joseph Gollup, vice president, served with the Army Engineer Corps; Col. Ernest Judd, general superintendent, with the Army Transportation Corp., and Malcolm Severance, personnel director, with the Army Chemical Warfare Service.

Walter Huenemoerder is architect for the development and Willard Hall is project manager.

Construction at Washington Estates is on a big scale. Severance said the weekly payroll was between $12,000 to $15,000. Over 200 building mechanics are on the rolls, including 65 carpenters, 17 plasters, 7 lathers, 20 masons and 75 laborers.

Parts of the house frame are prefabricated on the site. Rosoff said such construction added strength to the frame. The corporation has its own cutting shed, with jig tables, power saws and other labor-saving tools. Mill work is made at the shed.

Rock lath, asbestos shingles and nails were listed as the three items most difficult to obtain today.

Naylor Garden Sale Pushed

A UNIQUE METHOD of selling real estate will be undertaken at Naylor Gardens today, when 200 veterans hold "open house" in an effort to sell 550 apartments in the large garden-type apartment development.

All World War II veterans and servicemen were invited to the housing project, 30th st. and Naylor rd. se., from 2 to 5 p. m. today to inspect the various types of apartments.

The 200 veterans who will serve as hosts are members of the Veterans Cooperative Housing Association. The association has an option to buy the 748-unit housing development from the Government for $5,125,000.

It cost the Government slightly under seven million dollars to build the project in 1943. It is required by law to sell the project to a private purchaser as soon as possible.

The veterans group must make a down payment of $512,500 and have 300 contracts signed for membership by January 10, 1948, in order to take title to the property.

Under the purchase plan, association members would own one voting share and a right to "perpetual use" of the apartment he occupies. The member would not receive legal title to his residence since title would be vested in the association.

Prices for the "perpetual use" of the residences begin at $5680 for one-bedroom unit; $6750 for two bedrooms, and $7990 for three bedrooms.

J. C. Lawrence, association president, said a 20 per cent down payment, ranging from $1136 to $1690 depending upon the size of the apartment, is required. Monthly payments, including principal, interest and operating costs, would range from $59.50 to $78.50 monthly.

None of the 550 apartments is available for immediate occupancy by purchasers, Lawrence points out, but they are being vacated by present tenants at the rate of 15 to 25 each month.

Today's "open house" was organized by wives of member veterans. They drew up plans and went to work to get their own apartments in perfect shape. Some 25 VCHA members will throw open their own apartments for inspection to prospective members.

Other members will serve as guides and answer questions.

Sale of Naylor Gardens to VCHA has been under fire for months. A meeting was held August 21 by veteran tenants who opposed the purchase.

At that time they appointed a steering committee to protest the sale. Max Bloom, committee chairman, said his group opposed the purchase on the grounds that veterans and servicemen now living in the development are in danger of losing their apartments because they do not want or cannot afford to join the cooperative.

Earlier, Naylor Garden residents opposing the sale asked Congress and the Securities and Exchange Commission to investigate the proposed sale.

New High Set For Flooring

Chicago, Oct. 4.—An all-time high of 14,351,000,000 board feet of hardwood flooring was turned out in the Nation's major producing areas during the week ended September 20, the National Oak Flooring Manufacturers' Association reported today. Hardwood flooring has been listed among the scarce building materials since 1942.

The record output, the association said, was more than double the weekly average for September, 1946, and 40 per cent above the average for the first 26 weeks of this year. Conditions appear favorable, he added, for total 1947 production of more than 600 million board feet. That would surpass by some 16 million board feet the present annual output record established in 1926.

Real Estate Bond Prices At New High

At the close of the third quarter real estate bond prices stood at a new high of $761 per $1000 bond, it was reported yesterday. The September 30 average price compared with $757 on August 31 and $730 at the close or 1946. September was the second successive month in which real estate bond prices, as measured by the Amott-Baker Realty Bond Price Averages, an index of 200 issues, advanced. Prior to August the last previous high was recorded on June 30, 1946, when the averages stood at $753 per $1000 bond.

The September advance carried the averages up 0.5 per cent for the month and 4.2 per cent for the year to date. On September 30, 1946, real estate bonds had dropped to a low of $709 per $1000 bond. Present prices, therefore, represent a recovery of 7.3 per cent over the past year.

Principal gains during September were scored by the office building and apartment hotel bonds. A group of 87 office building issues were up 1.1 per cent while 26 apartment hotel bonds advanced 1.3 per cent. Apartment building issues, numbering 36 in the index, showed a gain of 0.8 per cent while 28 hotel bonds sold off 1.4 per cent.

In the classification by cities the 127 New York issues provided all of the market impetus on the up side for September. This group showed a gain of 1.2 per cent while 11 Boston, 26 Philadelphia and 12 Pittsburgh issues were down 0.1 per cent, 0.2 per cent and 1.5 per cent, respectively.

Motor Carrier Group to Build $200,000 Unit

Plans for a $200,000 four-story office building at 2109 E st. nw., were revealed yesterday by the Middle Atlantic States Motor Carrier Conference, Inc.

The organization, now operating with offices in the Earle Building, has retained the architectural firm of Porter and Lockie, according to D. T. Waring, general manaegr.

Waring declared his organization would occupy the basement and the first two floors, renting out the rest. The proposed building will be of brick, with limestone front. It will be air-conditioned.

The proposed building will be erected on ground purchased by MASMCC. Four dwellings now occupy the site.

The conference, Waring explained, represents 850 motor carrier concerns, from New York to Virginia. It is a non-profit organization, he added.

Reputable Builders Fix Flaws

regardless of its quality, often develops hairline cracks when a house settles.

These things are customary under present building conditions, he declared, and should be expected. Colonel Leonard concurred, declaring that some of his complaints have come from former servicemen who did not realize that home-owning involved work as well as pleasure.

Has to Go Easy

COLONEL LEONARD said he had "to go easy" in discussing complaints with builders since, in several instances, the builder had immediately offered to refund the money paid in and recover the house. In each case the veteran had refused, feeling the value of the structure had risen in the interim.

The Better Business Bureau has received from 40 to 50 inquiries a week about new housing. Only 5 per cent of this number consisted of complaints about new homes.

Where the complaints involved "reputable" dealers, adjustments were made by recourse to "moral suasion," while in other instances veterans were advised to take their complaint to court if their contract covered the matter.

The bureau advised veterans planning to build to heed the motto, "Before you invest, investigate." Two pamphlets on buying new homes are available in the bureau office at 11th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw.

Information on the reputation of builders and real estate men with whom the veteran may be planning to deal is also on file.

Surfaced Road Totals

Primary state highways in the United States were 92 percent surfaced in 1945 while 39 percent of county and local roads were surfaced.

Realty Round-Up

IN A five-page statement released to newspapers today, the Veterans' Administration warned mortgage lenders to stop making veterans put up some of their own funds for down payments on homes purchased under the GI Bill.

VA added that lending institutions would be inviting "corrective" legislation by Congress that will enable the veterans to obtain 100 per cent financing if banks maintained the down payment requirement.

The Government agency claimed that growing numbers of veterans were being prohibited from buying the home of their choice—even though the veteran's income was ample to carry the payments according to established lending practices.

Previously, Preston Delano, Comptroller of the Currency, urged state banking commissioners to check credit practices closely. Marriner S. Eccles, of the Federal Reserve System, warned: "Conditions are favorable for a further substantial expansion of private credit that may contribute further to excessive inflation and lead to disastrous consequences for the economy.

He advised, the National Association of Real Estate Boards commented, for State banks to take a critical attitude toward any expansion of loans, unless they contribute directly to increased production and movement of goods. This attitude, NAREB quoted Eccles as saying, "should apply particularly to consumer credit real estate loans based on inflated values, loans to carry excessive inventories, and any loans for speculative purposes."

VA has rapped the knuckles of lending institutions before on the matter of down payments. In an address before a banking group at Milwaukee, on November 22, 1946, T. B. King, director of VA's loan guaranty service, said:

FROM THE MAIL BAG: Jess Fisher & Co., Inc., have moved their offices from 913 New York ave. nw., to 1420 K st. nw . . . Directors of the Prefabricated Home Manufacturers' Institute will meet tomorrow and Tuesday here to discuss the association's fall program . . . U. S. Plywood Corp. says the Florida hurricane gave prefabs a boost when four houses constructed of weldwood plywood at Silver Beach, Fla., withstood winds of more than 150 mph velocity . . . Delegates to the NAREB San Francisco convention, November 9-14, will hear of the appraisal of four million acres of Western land, believed to be the largest area in one ownership ever valued in a single proceeding . . . John H. Rice, of Washington, is a new member of the National Institute of Real Estate Brokers.

"In any case where a lender thinks a cash payment is necessary from a security standpoint—particularly in the case of loans under $10,000—it would seem to clearly establish the fact the property is overpriced and it would be a greater service to the veteran not to make the loan."

Last December, King sold a group of New Jersey bankers: "Where you are making (down payment) requirement mandatory as to every case, or even in a great bulk of cases, you by that action are legislating, because you are defeating the primary tenet of the existing legislation, which was and is that the homecoming veteran should be able to finance the entire purchase price or construction cost of the home in which he is resuming civilian life with his family."

He warned the group that if the practice was continued, "you virtually compel new legislation."

THE DISTRICT Chapter of the National Home and Property Owners Foundation has taken a booth at the Home Show-Exposition and will conduct a referendum of visitors on the question of repeal of the District income tax and the substitution of a sales tax.

The following have been named to head the organization for 1947: Harry Stull, chairman; Dr. Frank Gauss, secretary-treasurer; Leo M. Bernstein. Joseph Deckman and Lewis Breuninger, vice chairmen.

Seattle Faces Home Shortage Despite 5808 Empty Houses

By Henry Minard

SEATTLE, Oct. 5 (U.P.).—With 5808 habitable housing units vacant, Seattle, oddly enough, is suffering its worst housing shortage in history.

The unique condition has given rise to reports that Seattle would become the first overhoused city in the Nation.

A United Press survey of economists, builders, realtors and housing center managers, however, revealed an urgent need for from 20,000 to 29,000 units.

The vacant 5808 dwellings represent units either beyond the pocketbooks of a broad low-income group, or apartments held off the market for one reason or another.

Many completed homes are not selling. Of the 1500 apartments expected to be finished by 1948, most of the units will rent for over $70. The demand, however, is for $55 a month apartments.

Nest Eggs Have Gone

"It is increasingly apparent there are fewer and fewer people with $500 or $1000 down payments," said one realtor. Nest eggs are gone and those who have savings are unwilling to pay $12,000 for a home.

The "overhoused" prediction for Seattle seems to be based on a belief that the current upswing in Northwest job opportunities is temporary and new jobs will prove to be of short-term duration. Builders, trying to keep pace with the ever increasing demand for homes by migrating Midwesterners, in that case would be left holding thousands of vacant homes.

Every quarter flatly refuted that forecast. All agreed that Seattle's housing problem is critical, but the current employment increase and resultant general migration this way is a solid condition.

"This is not a mushrooming thing," said August Zeller, manager of the Seattle housing center.

1000 Rental Demands

Zellner said in his center alone there were 1000 new rental applicants in August compared to about 700 in June.

"If we built 10,000 units per year for two years we couldn't meet the demand," said F. R. McAbee, chairman of Mayor Devin's emergency housing committee.

Regional Analyst Bayard Wheeler said the crux of the national housing problem is that incomes are failing to keep up with construction costs.

Wheeler said a careful check he made in 1946 indicated 49,000 new units would be needed in Seattle by 1955. He based his predictions on a population of 460,000 by 1950. Most recent census figures reported Seattle's 1947 population had already passed that mark.

Pittsburg Seeks to Lose Smoky Title

Pittsburgh, Oct. 4—This city took its final step Wednesday in a campaign officially started in 1941 to clear its skies of the smoke that has smudged its buildings, harried its housewives, speckled the white shirts of its business men and generally clouded its reputation.

On that day the anti-smoke ordinance was extended to all private homes in this city, where the word "smog" was born. The law, already effective for industry, commercial buildings and transport, now covers the 141,788 coal-burning one and two-family homes in Pittsburgh.

The law will not, however, affect a 128-municipality suburban area slightly larger than Pittsburgh itself. Thus, city officials did not look for a sudden and miraculous renascence of the steel city by 12:01 a. m. Wednesday.

They point instead to the steady increase in visibility and cleanliness here over the two years that the law has been effective for the mills, stores, apartment buildings, railroads and tugboats. And they explain that home-smoke control is merely the final milestone in a dusty road which may see Pittsburgh relatively dirt-free within the next few years.

Although the present ordinance now covers only the city, the public opinion which brought it about is already at work on a drive to extend its provision, or similar ones, over all of industrial Alleghany County, for "smoke," they point out, "doesn't recognize the city line."

The smoke law prohibits dense smoke except for short necessary periods, such as when building a fire. It also prohibits coal dealers from delivering smoky, bituminous coal to places not equipped with stokers or mechanical devices to burn it smokelessly.

Rubbish Heads List of Home Fire Hazards

The three most common causes of fires in the home, according to carefully compiled statistics, are accumulation of rubbish, defective chimneys and combustible roofs. With the winter season approaching, home owners are cautioned to eliminate these hazards as far as possible.

For safety's sake, a "fall cleaning" is just as important as the more common spring cleaning. Make sure that old papers, oily rags and other combustibles are removed from basements, garages, attics and wherever else they may have gathered.

A thorough check of the chimneys, and all other parts of the heating system, is a wise precaution to take before cold weather sets in.

The safest protection against roof fires is to replace old combustible roofing materials with new ones that are fireproof or fire-resistant.

Let's Get Down To Earth:

Gardening Season Doesn't End With Frost

By James H. Beattie

FROST is the signal for the cessation of gardening operations to many gardeners. However, there are still many things which require attention. Hardy crops, including cabbage, kale, lettuce, spinach, turnips, salsify, parsnips and others, can yield excellent returns for several weeks or even months, provided they have a little attention. In a way, fall and winter garden work is of equal importance to the actual operations during the summer.

One is tempted to thoroughly clean up the garden in autumn, removing all weeds, plant remains and other unsightly material and leaving the area in a spick and span condition ready for next spring.

This form of tidiness, when not accompanied by cover cropping and other protective soil measures, may not be good practice. Under these conditions bare garden soil will lose fertility and mineral soil structure.

Garden space should be covered during the winter. Muddy water running from the garden site is a sure sign of destructive erosion. It may be prevented by a soil cover of growing plant material like kale, rye or oats. Similar protection may be had by mulching with poultry litter or similar material. It is not too late to sow rye, oats, kale or other protective crops.

Make Use of Compost

COMPOST from the garden compost pile works fine. While objectionable from the point of view of harboring certain insects and diseases, one can mulch with chopped up sweet corn fodder and other crop remains. Such material may be removed during early spring before insects and diseases become active.

Material with viable weed seeds should not be used. Garden refuse, although diseased, may be composted and chemically treated to render it relatively harmless as far as pests are concerned.

Soil cover and fertility can be retained during winter by control of surface water. Erosion in the form of ditches and muddy run-off water are proof of soil fertility loss. Much of this waste may be avoided.

Cabbage, kale, lettuce, spinach, turnips, salsify, parsnips and other hardy crops are as tasty in October as in July

Cover crops and heavy mulching are of most importance, but a little attention to diverting surface water from sloping or hilly garden areas will help. Construction of a few small ridges or levees at right angles to the slope will aid. For hilly garden sites it is an excellent plan to plant asparagus, herbs, small fruits or other perennial crops on slight ridges extending across the garden. These help prevent washing and soil erosion.

Go Easy With Spade

WHAT about fall plowing or spading? Where cover cropping is practiced, the work must be deferred until the cover crop has made a worth-while growth, usually early to midspring. As a rule, land that is very steep or subject to erosion should be plowed or spaded in spring. Heavy textured soils are less subject to serious erosion and their physical character is usually improved by fall turning which exposes them to alternate freezing and thawing during winter.

In cases where manure, poultry litter, or other forms of cover is available for mulching, fall plowing of these heavy soils is usually best. In the case of light-textured, particularly sandy soils, the spring season is usually better.

Bean poles, tomato stakes and other supports used for annual crops, should be removed from the soil and stored in a dry place. The treatment of stakes with zinc or copper base wood preservatives will insure long life. These materials are available from dealers at moderate cost.

Winter mulches are usually extremely beneficial to certain garden plants. Spinach and kale, for instance, may be kept in a near-growing condition throughout the winter if given a light protective covering.

Strawberries require a mulch to prevent damage from alternate freezing and thawing. In most cases heavy mulches should not be applied too early in autumn, usually just before severe freezing weather occurs. It is usually wise to place the mulch material between the rows of plants during early autumn so as to have it in readiness when the necessity arises.

Like many other excellent practices, mulching may become the means of causing great injury through too early or too heavy application. Plants are easily smothered and retention of water by the mulch may cause rotting.

Mice Like Fruit Trees

MICE injury to trees and plants is acute when winter mulches are used. The mulch supplies a harboring place for the mice. In the case of fruit trees subject to attack by mice, remove all sod from around the base of the tree and keep the mulch several inches from the trunk.

Cleaning of trashy borders where mice can find shelter is wise. Many commercial materials are available for controlling mice.

Revival of V-Gardens Urged

Immediate revival of the victory garden program to help relieve the food crisis was urged yesterday in a telegram sent to Secretary of Agriculture Clinton Anderson by Rodney Brandon, newly reelected president of the National Garden Institute.

"Our people demonstrated during the war that they could produce important amounts of food to supplement commercial production. It is not too late to effect a great increase in the number and extent of home gardens in the South and on the Pacific Coast this year," Brandon declared.

"Next spring other victory gardeners can be remobilized. Intelligent leadership and guidance are needed to inspire householders, both in towns and on the farm, as to kinds and quantities of crops they can grow or preserve to combat present high food costs."

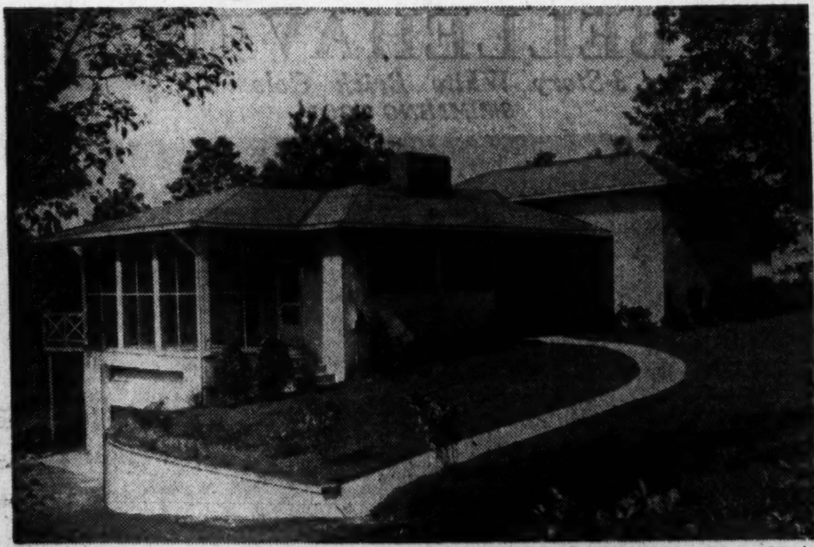
Ravenwood Estates



This new home, designed by a modern architect, is orientated to the advantage of large 1¼-acre homesite, 137 ft. x 400 ft. connected with sewer.

Radiant heat, copper plumbing, latest bathroom fixtures, factory pre-finished floors, large windows, flush panel doors, solid brass hardware, large closets and an aluminum stairrail in hall are only a few of the special features included.

An attractive entrance hall leads to a "split-level" stairway accommodating four bedrooms and 2½ baths. The kitchen is accessible to the bedrooms without entering either the dining or living room.

The living room and dining room are combined to provide one very large room. However, a bookcase affords semi-partition between the living dining areas. This combination room opens to a rear balcony which overlooks the rear property, and a separate screened porch which also connects with the kitchen. Large windows open from the living room to the south and a view.

"Beautycraft' steel cabinets, large counter with double sink, adjoining dinette, exhaust fan and entrance to screened porch are features of the modern kitchn.

The recreation room opens to the lower ground level and is finished complete with fireplace and radiant heating.

A double car garage with overhead door is connected with an asphalt drive from the street. A generous budget was allowed for landscaping. The interior decorations are modern.

First grade materials and the finest workmanship have been employed throughout.

LOVELY OLD HOMESTEAD

In The Heart of Arlington

A typical old-fashioned farm house, situated on a rise that presents a gorgeous vista overlooking Arlington, this house offers the charm and privacy of country life with every city convenience.

Gorgeous trees, from one to 200 years old, flowering shrubs and perennials, an outdoor fireplace, rambling open porches running along 3 sides of the house—these are but a few of the features that make this an attractive investment.

Of center hall design, the old fashioned parlor and sitting rooms are at the left. A delightful octagonal dining room is upon the right, and the large country kitchen at the back with breakfast nook at one end. These rooms all open upon the sheltered porches. A full bath and several closets complete the first floor.

There are 3 corner bedrooms on the second floor with a full bath now under construction. The heat is oil hot-water. Venetian blinds throughout. Priced for quick sale at $19,500, this offers a good investment.

There are 4½ acres adjoining this estate also available at $4,000 per acre. They contain approximately 50 bearing fruit trees, berry bushes, rhubarb and asparagus beds, a 400 capacity chicken house and small barn for cow or pony, and some of the most beautiful old trees to be found anywhere.

This land may be purchased separately as a most attractive investment for development purposes or the house and acreage may be obtained as one estate.

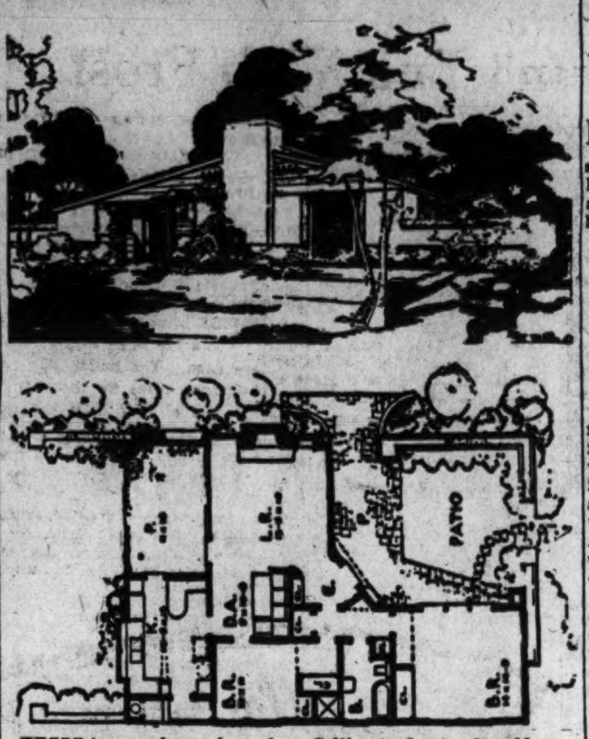
Ranch Plan With Patio



HERE is a ranch-type home from California that is adaptable to any section of the country. It is so practical in design that it can be built on a wide lot as shown in the rendering, or on a narrow lot with the bedroom and patio to the front. This home offers the privacy home owners everywhere are demanding in spite of cramped quarters and limited sites. Its walled patio and brick-floored porches screen open sides of the living room and large bedroom from the street or neighbors. Back porch location is ideal for outdoor dining and built-in barbeque, with handy sliding glass doors from both kitchen and living room to solve the problem of carrying outdoor equipment through the house. Six closets, open wood ceilings and plenty of built-in storage space in the kitchen further enhance this model home, designed for the Los Angeles Home Show and shown in Practical Builder magazine. Working plans are not available

Bricks Are Gold On Black Market

HAMBURG (AP).—Latest hard-to-get objects to be cornered by German black marketeers are bricks.

Farmers barter food for bricks, salvaged from the ruins. A special campaign has been launched to prevent their being smuggled.

Building officials said an estimated one million marks worth of bricks had gone onto the black market while the city was receiving only 10 per cent of its building materials allocation from the bizonal reconstruction agency.

Seldom, Says Expert:

When Is an Old House Worth What It Costs?

IF YOU plan to purchase an old house which needs extensive alterations, think twice before you buy, warns F. F. Peters, a professional remodeler. Writing in Better Homes and Gardens magazine, he points out, "Extensive remodeling, piece by piece, can add up to a startling total, even 1000 per cent of what the complete home should have cost originally."

Value of a used house, as of a used car, lies in what it is, not in what you think it could be, Peters declared. You cannot convert a 10-room farmhouse into a cozy cottage, or try to transform a gingerbread Victorian into a pre-Revolutionary antique.

If you find an old house that meets your needs, make an accurate appraisal of it. First, stand well back from the house to see if it stands squarely. Check for a sagging roof, a straight eave line, windows lined up without a dip. Answer these questions, and you will get a fair idea of the condition of the house's frame.

Look at the roof, the outside covering, the window frames and the grade line. If shingles are wood, remember they last only about 20 years. If the grade line is above the foundation, check to see if the sill is rotted. Stick a pocket knife here and there in search of rot, especially where the wood is bare.

In the cellar, determine if the foundation is straight and leakproof, Peters added. A look at the furnace and exposed piping tells the installation's adequacy and workmanship. If the pipe from the furnace to the chimney is flaked and blistered the furnace is too small. If water piping is slipshod, and not of brass or copper, it may mean expensive repairs.

Next check exposed wood joists, girders, sill and posts. They should be well joined and free from termites. Floors should be solid to walk on and level. Consider the partitions and openings. A door in place is an asset, a door to be moved a liability. A plastered partition is worth $5 a running foot, but taken apart and moved, it is worth less than nothing.

If the house frame satisfies you, look at the plumbing next. If it was installed before World War I, write it off as a complete loss. If after, examine fixtures for cracks—they can't be repaired. A gurgling drain is a sure indication the plumbing was installed without regard for health or building codes.

Bakery Uses Radiant Heating

An addition to the Stephanson Bakery, 23d and Pennsylvania ave. se., is under construction, and will feature radiant heating, it was announced yesterday.

Grids of wrought iron pipe in the floor will provide warmth, also aid in drying the floor after scrubbings. The addition is expected to be completed next month.

Engaged in the project are Arthur B. Heaton, architect; M. F. Hoppe, consulting engineer; Prescott Construction Co., builders, and W. K. Pace, heating contractor, all of Washington.

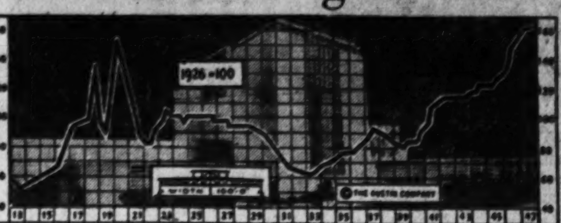
Industrial Building Costs Rise



INDUSTRIAL building costs advanced two points, to 163, during the last three months, according to a cost index (1926 equals 100) issued by the Austin Co., Cleveland building firm. The firm attributed the rise to further increases in construction materials and equipment, shortages in glass, roof insulation, and all products fabricated from steel sheet, plates and pipe. In addition, localized strikes have disrupted delivery schedules of steel, tile and other products

Plenty for Next Year

Bountiful Broomcorn Crop Assures Housewife of Sweeps

By Lawrence Eldred

MATTOON, ILL., Oct. 4 (AP).—Harvest knives in this vicinity are cutting into the world's most productive broomcorn crop, assuring Madame Housewife plenty of clean sweeps for next year.

The little-known crop is reported as "good" despite adverse weather conditions. Prices are running around $400 a ton, the same as last year, agricultural agents report, and farmers in Coles and Cumberland Counties will produce an estimated 2000 tons this year. On the average, about 80 dozen brooms can be made from a ton.

But time was when one set of housewives — those married to the broomcorn farmers—nearly eliminated broomcorn as the thriving American field crop it had become from a single seed planted by Benjamin Franklin nearly two centuries ago.

He reportedly saw a neighbor woman using an imported corn whisk to sweep her floor. In examining the novelty he noticed one seed still clung tenaciously to the brush. From that seed planted in the Franklin garden there eventually were enough descendant plants so the first commercial crop was produced in 1797 in the Connecticut River Valley near Hadley, Mass.

Production swept westward with the settlers and reached ideal growing conditions in Coles County, Ill., in 1830, making the first commercial crop in 1858.

For nearly a half century Illinois led the world in broomcorn acreage, yield and total production—most of it centered around Mattoon.

But about 1900 the farmwives refused any longer to board the large harvest crews of 35 to 40 men for the 10 days to 2 weeks needed to cut, cure and bale the crop.

Not until hard roads and automobiles made "commuting" possible for the crews did the farmwives relax their no-broomcorn manifesto, but by that time a peculiar arc around the Texas Panhandle, where temperature and soil were just right, had opened up broader and cheaper acreage.

However, Illinois continues far in the lead in average yield per acre, estimated by the Department of Agriculture September 1 as running about 500 pounds to the acre—equal to some 20 dozen top-quality brooms.

This compared with the 270 to 375 pounds average yield this year in Oklahoma, Colorado, Texas, New Mexico and Kansas. The difference is attributed largely to 38 inches average rainfall a year in the Illinois broomcorn district and 23 inches in the Southwest.

Laboratory Curio Tops Plastic Field

NEW YORK, Oct. 4 (AP).—A laboratory curio that lay idle for 94 years has become one of the top thermoplastics in the raw plastics field.

This is polystyrene, a colorless plastic from which radio cabinets, refrigerator shields, television lenses, flashlights, kitchen accessories and kindred units are manufactured.

Technically, polystyrene is an offshoot of styrene monomer, a key ingredient of synthetic rubber.

It was first isolated in 1839 by Johann Eduard Simon, an obscure Berlin apothecary, who died in poverty in 1856 without realizing the significance of his discovery.

Using the foundation of knowledge built up in Europe, American chemists perfected the process and limited production was begun in 1937.

American manufacturers hail it because it is priced far below competing thermoplastics. Production jumped to 22 million pounds in 1945, 55 million pounds in 1946, and is estimated at 150 million pounds in 1947.

Its chief asset is that it can be used in injection molding machines, the fastest and most economical method of producing plastic objects, according to Monsanto Chemical Co., a major producer.

"This does away with hand labor almost entirely," a Monsanto representative said. "By machine the raw material is converted into finished products without painting, enameling, die stamping, machining or labeling."

A tensile strength greater than lead, zinc, glass or copper is claimed for the thermoplastic. Its crystal clarity and limitless color range are other assets.

Refrigerator manufacturers will use eight million pounds in 1947 and estimate their needs will be in excess of 20 million pounds in 1948.

Scientific Device Tests Foundations

Evanston, Ill., Oct. 4 (AP).—A new method for determining the strength of clays and other subsoils which, experts said, will enable engineers to design and construct buildings and dams more economically, has been developed at the Northwestern University Technological Institute.

The inventors, Professors P. C. Rutledge and J. C. Osterberg, and T. W. Van Zelst, a graduate research assistant, described their device as a pore water pressure instrument.

"The work," Rutledge said, "will contribute to better levees along rivers and aid the Nation's flood control program."

House of Make-Believe

Decorators Give Walls Personality

Around the library fireplace in Sloane's new House of Years is a white brick wall. The inset tiles, by Ruth Norman, celebrate seven American flag raisings. The wooden eagle was a Vermont tavern sign

U. S. Plywood's weldwood, in a natural elm finish, covers three of the library walls in the House of Years and makes the bookcases, some of which are inset into the deep window alcove. The fourth wall is white brick. An old cast-iron soldier, in the center, makes a lamp

The walls of a boy's room are covered with Plankweld, another new product by U. S. Plywood. Instead of being put together flush, the panels are offset a little and given a birch finish. Units of knotty pine, alternating open and closed cases, are used for most of the furniture

Bookcases are set into one of the library's wood-paneled walls. Some are turned into shadow boxes with glass fronts, in which a lead soldier collection parades against old print backgrounds

By Eugenia Sheppard

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—House of Years, two stories of make-believe on the main floor of Sloane's Furniture Store has reopened. It looks ready for a party. Alfred J. Lowden, its decorator, has set it in that tense moment before the doorbell rings. Every antique is in place. Every new chintz falls just-right folds. The dinner table is set and the kitchen looks ready for business. In the master bedroom you expect to catch the hostess of a last-minute nose-powdering before her mahogany dressing table—Sloane's own Nantucket colonial.

Though the house is keyed to hospitality, there is plenty of decorating news about its cheery, extrovert personality. Much of this news concerns walls—wood-paneled, covered with hard-painted papers or treated to new, darker colors like a mauve-brown.

Two rooms introduce new products by United States Plywood, weldwood and plankweld. Made of native woods and given natural elm and birch finishes, these add up to more dollars than paper or paint, but represent an eventual saving in cleaning and replacement. The plankweld boards are slightly offset, giving considerable dimensional interest to the walls on which they are used.

Sloane's has collected a group of hand-painted wallpapers to be ordered not by panel or roll, but by a blueprint of the intended room. This trick, too, represents saving for the setting that calls for special treatment.

A green background pattern called "Persian Garden" is used on two walls of the House of Years dining room, which has a Sloane mahogany table and chairs covered with red leather seats. A second hand-painted paper, "Corinth," climbs the hallway beside the grand staircase. It shows flower-twined columns against a pale blue-green background.

Bedrooms introduce three furniture collections, workable for today's space requirements and ways of living. They are the dark mahogany with brass hardware, a group that includes traditional pieces like highboys in two sizes and contemporary additions like a double chest of drawers. French provincial in a light-finish fruitwood appears in the guest room, and there is a good third choice—units of knotty pine that can be juggled to suit the owner and are budget priced.

Egypt Asks Vaccine to Fight Cholera

Cairo, Egypt, Oct. 3 (U.P.).—The American Embassy announced today that the Egyptian government had asked the United States to supply one million more units of vaccine to help break the cholera epidemic here.

The United States Navy announced yesterday it was sending its entire supply—1,600,000 units—to Egypt.

American planes already have flown in 55,898 pounds of medical supplies, and almost every nation in the world is rushing vaccine here. With more than 200 persons dead, the outbreak is disrupting everyday activity.

Two Optimist Groups Set Leaders' Talks

Optimist Week will be observed here next week by two local chapters of Optimist International.

The Washington Optimist Club will hear Franklin A. Steinko, vice president of Optimist International, at the Mayflower Hotel Tuesday at 12:30 a. m.

The National Capital Optimist Club will be addressed by Dr. Joseph W. Seay, past president of Optimist International, the following day at 12:30 p. m. at the Continental Hotel.

DR. SEAY

MR. STEINKO

Optimist Week is being observed from coast to coast and in several foreign countries this week by 31,500 members of Optimist Clubs. The clubs are located in 460 communities in the United States, Puerto Rico, Cuba, Mexico, Canada, England and Australia.

International president of the organization is Lucien L. Renuart, Miami, Fla., lumber supply dealer.

The Optimists and their female counterparts, the "Opti-Mrs.", are greatly concerned with boys' activities and have established summer camps, club houses, workshops, baseball leagues, football teams, health clinics, bands and orchestras and other activities for young men up to the age of 17 years.

There are two Optimist groups in the District. The National Capital Optimist Club is headed by James L. Stout of the Dr. Pepper Bottling Co. and meets weekly at the Continental Hotel. The second group, the Optimist Club of Washington, is headed by Roland Reutlinger of the Combustioneer Corp. and meets at the Mayflower Hotel.

Both are units of the Sixteenth District of Optimist International.

In addition to sponsoring a wide number of boys' activities in Greater Washington, the two Optimist clubs four years ago inaugurated the University of Citizenship now held at American University.

The University of Citizenship is attended by young men from the District, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia. This year about 125 boys attended and received graduation certificates from Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

Wall St. Journal Plans Southwestern Edition

New York, Oct. 4 (AP).—The Wall Street Journal announced today plans to start regular publication in Dallas, Tex., of Southwestern edition. The first issue is tentatively scheduled to appear March 1, 1948.

Dallas was selected as the publication center after an extensive survey, an announcement said, because it provided the best distribution potential for the entire Southwest. The Journal is now published in New York and San Francisco.

October With 31 Days and 14 'Weeks' Leaves One Weak

Maybe you think that because there are 31 days in October there can only be four-plus weeks.

That is because you are looking at the calendar.

In terms of special promotion weeks there are at least 14 nationally celebrated weeks in October, according to the partial list compiled by the United States Chamber of Commerce, which doesn't reckon with locally observed weeks.

This goes on all the time, because the Chamber of Commerce lists 56 weeks for a 52-week year, and doesn't include such things as holiday weeks. But just taking October——

When October began Wednesday, three days of National Religious Education Week had already elapsed, but National Newspaper Week was just beginning.

Nationally Advertised Brands Week, which lasts 10 days, started Friday.

Does it begin to seem like a busy month?

Right you are, Amigo, for today four weeks start: National Business Women's, National Fire Prevention, National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week and Optimist Week.

Then next Saturday National Wine Week will begin.

The following day National Letter Writing Week gets off to a licking start.

Then no more weeks start for a week, when National Bible Week opens a day after National Honey Week. The latter is not to be confused with National Honey for Breakfast Week, sponsored by the same organization but held in April.

The earth spins on, and on October 25 National Apple Week opens, and the following day National Better Parenthood and National Girl Scout Weeks begin.

Without even dreaming of observing three weeks in one week it leaves one weak.

Night Courses Offered

Registration for night school at Montgomery Blair High School, Silver Spring, Md., will be held Tuesday at 7:30 p. m. in preparation for the opening of courses Thursday at 8 p. m., Daryl W. Shaw, principal, said yesterday.

Classes in typing, sewing, clothing renovation, electric arc and acetylene welding, mechanical drawing, public speaking and health training for men will be organized. Depending upon the interest of persons in the community, Shaw said, it may be possible also to offer classes in conversational Spanish, shorthand and other subjects.

Public Health Nurse Supply Falling Short

The number of nurses engaged in public health work in the United States is failing to meet both current demands and increasing population, according to the 1947 annual census of public health nurses.

While stating that more nurses are engaged in public health work this year than ever before, the census added that "nurses are needed to fill the 2489 vacancies in budgeted positions which were reported by the States at the beginning of the year 1947."

In addition nurses are needed for 1087 counties which had no public health nursing service, and for expanding programs in many medical fields.

In Washington, the American Public Health Association reports that there are 116 nurses now, and the increase over last year has not been appreciable. The association has asked Congress for money for the 1949 fiscal year to increase its nurses by 60.

The association is attempting to reach a goal of one nurse for each 2000 population but said such a ratio would require approximately 288 nurses, 110 more than it will have even if Congress grants its request.

Difficulties in getting nurses for public health work are due to the fact that the nurses go where they are assigned, and the requirement that all applicants for public health nursing training have at least one year of college.

Lake Shipments Of Ore Increased

Cleveland, Oct. 4 (AP).—Shipments of iron ore from upper lake ports during September climbed to 10,632,778 gross tons, or more than a million tons above the 9,636,353 gross tons in the same 1946 month, the Lake Superior Iron Ore Association reported today.

This included 234,890 tons of Canadian ore against 217,504 in September last year.

The cumulative total for the season through September was boosted to 61,699,561 tons, which was nearly 18,500,000 tons ahead of the 1946 total.

Underwriters Institute Elects Officers for Year

Chicago, Oct. 4 (AP).—Robert B. Caplinger of Dallas, Tex., today was elected president of the Institute of Home Office Underwriters at the insurance men's group's eleventh annual meeting.

N. Murray Longworth, Omaha, Nebr., was named executive vice president; William H. Neely, Jackson, Miss., vice president and editor; John T. Acres, jr., Louisville, Ky., secretary-treasurer, and James D. Renn, Jacksonville, Fla., and William H. Harrison, Binghamton, N. Y., executive committee members.

Sales Set High Record At N. Y. Business Show

New York, Oct. 4 (AP).—Sales and inquiries reached a record high at the National Business Show this week in Grand Central Palace, Mark E. Tupper, managing director, said today.

Attendance at the show reached more than 45,000 by Friday night, and representatives said sales by midweek had doubled those of the full week of the show a year ago.

Assessments Protested

Public hearings for the approximately 20 Bethesda businessmen protesting property assessment hikes will be held Wednesday at 10 a. m. by the Maryland Tax Commission in the Rockville Court House.

Protests of the businessmen followed increased business assessments in Bethesda which added approximately five million dollars to Montgomery County tax rolls and more than doubled the previous assessment in Bethesda's business section.

Several Silver Spring property owners also protesting their assessments are scheduled to appear on Thursday before the tax commission.

Ford Canada Prices Up

Windsor, Ont., Oct. 4 (INS).—The Ford Motor Co. of Canada announced today 2 to 10 per cent price increases on all Ford, Mercury and Lincoln cars and trucks. Car prices go up 6 to 10 per cent and truck prices are boosted 2 to 10 per cent.

2 Obstacles Delay Alexandria Clinic For Mental Health

Establishment of Alexandria's mental health clinic is now waiting for the services of a part-time psychiatrist and a place to operate.

The Alexandria Council of Social Agencies learned from a special committee Thursday that only these obstacles stand in the way of the clinic, for which Federal funds were made available in August. Executive Secretary Wallace S. Hughes said that now under consideration for use is a house about three miles from town, offered at $1 a year rent.

At its regular monthly meeting, the council also heard an order from Judge Marion B. West of the Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court establishing a Citizens Advisory Board to his court. The council has urged formation of such a body since last spring.

Dr. G. W. Bogikes, chairman of the dental health committee, reported that Washington dental students will conduct a one-day survey of the teeth of Alexandria's 6577 school children soon to determine the need of a school dental program. Although authorized by the City Council, the position of school dentist remains vacant.

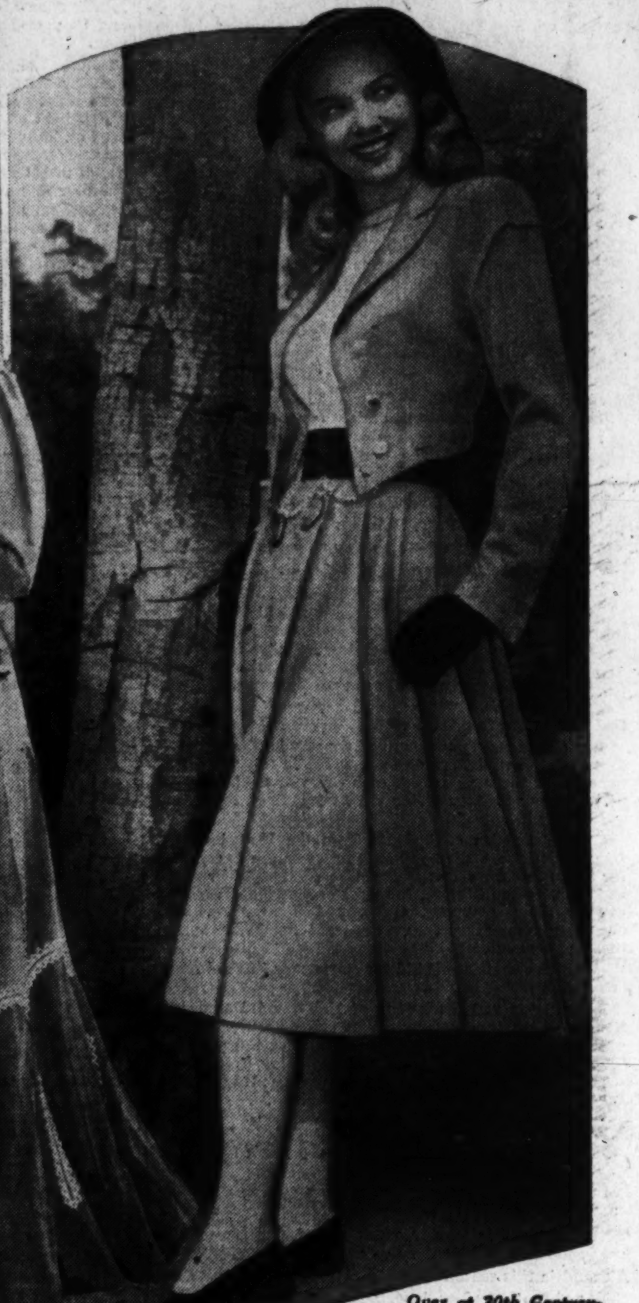
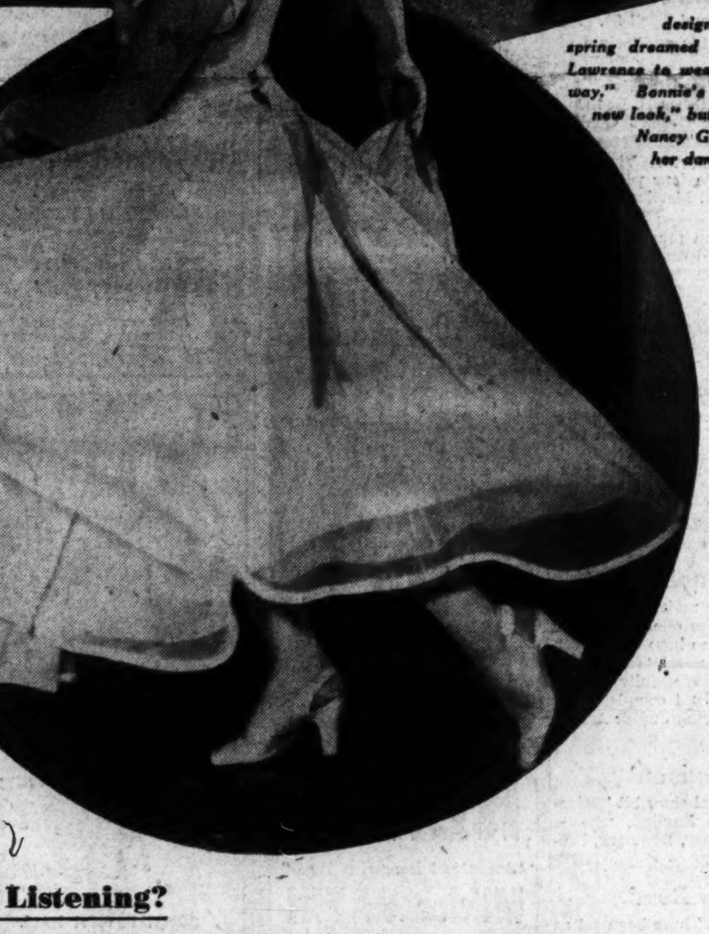
Hollywood Takes Equivocal Stand in Hemline Controversy

Hollywood's not pulling its punches when it comes to the long skirts—padded hips—veiled hats—frilly furbelows battle. On the Warner lot, Penny Edwards, above, has started what she calls a "Short Skirters Club" for "freedom of the knees," a freedom Penny can well afford. And Comedian Jack Carson, center with Ann Sothern, says his answer to longer skirts for the girls is shorter pants for men. "It's healthier," says Jack, "because you get more sun on your legs." Ann and Jack are working on "April Showers"





Over at 20th Century-Fox, they're proud of their designer, Bonnie Cashin, who last spring dreamed up the above outfit for Barbara Lawrence to wear in "Give My Regards to Broadway." Bonnie's boast is that she forecasts "the new look," but doesn't exaggerate the style. Left, Nancy Guild exhibits an evening gown for her dancing chores in "Give My Regards."

Films Will Not Skirt the Issue

By Richard L. Coe

WHOOPS.

This is none of our business, but we'll tackle it anyway.

It's about women's skirts.

REV. DAVIES

Ever since radio's Town Meeting of the Air devoted a full network hour to this shattering subject they—and Hollywood—have been on our conscience.

Because Hollywood makes its pictures months, even years, ahead of release, our flesh has been crawling in sympathy for the budget boys and how their expensive celluloid may be out of date by the time their stars' glittering limbs soothe your tear-drenched eyes.

Does the fresh wind from Paris, whipped up by the ecstasies of New York drum-beaters, threaten to make the pictures you'll see within the next year look like something out of the family album?

No.

Save your tears for the screen adventures of Miss Garson and her sisters.

Hollywood isn't so dumb. Its feet are on the ground and 14 inches above 'em is movieland's hemline.

And there it's going to stick, at least according to five of the six studios we've quizzed on the deal.

Rev. Davies Started It

NOTHING, as a matter of fact, touched off such approval in the movie capital as the Rev. A. Powell Davies' sermon here two weeks ago today, wherein he pointed out that longer dresses "waste the material that is desperately needed by the world's suffering people."

According to Dore Schary, the Capital's outspoken minister will have a hearty welcome any time he visits Schary's RKO-Radio studio.

Schary writes that Irene Dunne, Barbara Bel Geddes, Jane Greer, Laraine Day, Myrna Loy and other actresses under his command will "not blindly follow the latest dictates from Paris. Actresses in our pictures will continue to wear clothes which become them, irrespective of the 'commands' of distant coutouriers."

Over at Warners, they feel the same way. Dancer Penny Edwards founded the Short Skirters Club and is forwarding all her mail to the fashion "autocrats."

At 20th Century, Expert Bonnie Cashin pointed out that her job has been to "guess ahead," but that she's a "moderate." How much of the gams in "Nightmare Alley," "The Snake Pit" and "Give My Regards to Broadway" you'll see was figured out last spring—at what Bonnie describes as "a moderate 14 inches."

Universal's Orry Kelly stumps for things as they are: "I refuse to conform to this latest decree and many other Hollywood designers feel as I do about the 'silly fashion extremes.' "

To Some It's Welcome

ON the other side of the line over at Culver City's sprawling Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio, the two top designers seem to be welcoming the New York-Paris "decrees." Though they don't put it quite that way.

Irene, whose name you've seen on hundreds of screen credits, reports she "began dropping the hemline as early as February '45. That was for "Easy to Wed" in which both Esther Williams and Lucille Ball were decked out in longer skirts.

Irene says that she remembered that when material became "plentiful" again after World War I, skirts were lengthened and she foresaw the same thing happening at the end of World War II.

But, says the Metro stylist, "I am compromising. I have just completed Barbara Stanwyck's clothes for 'B. F.'s Daughter' and although they are long, they are not ankle-length as the women's fashions may well be in the months to come.

"However," Irene winds up, hedging, "the length depends on the height of the individual, the length of the leg and general build."

Metro's other designer, Helen Rose, goes along with Irene and prophesies that because the change came suddenly, people haven't had time to get used to them. Once they do, they'll like them."

Culver City's currently boasting about "Merton of the Movies," now at the Capitol. The period for that one is the early '30s and those period flim-flams now appear almost modern, says the studio, "because today's fashions have reverted to that period."

So the Battle's On

SO, FOLKS, it looks like a fight's on between the slick chics of Gotham's fashion world and Hollywood's doughty band of stand-patters.

Just how much of this is artistic gobbledegook and how much a commercial urge to protect movies already prepared for the Nation's screens is anybody's guess.

But the boys who are the happiest are the producers of costume pictures. The headwaiter of the Brown Derby parks them in the best spots and folk involved with the uncertain skirt question get dining booths without telephones.

"Forever Amber," "My Wild Irish Rose," "The Woman in White," "I Remember Mama" and "Captain From Castile" might not achieve critical acclaim or box office kudos, but in costume flicks you exhibit your best features by other means than straight calf-grazing.

And if you don't think the appeal of Hollywood's beautiful, uncluttered gams doesn't enter into this cosmic question, you're not very bright. Not very bright at all.

But you're a lot brighter than this reporter, who feels foolish about having gotten into all this. Just to keep the record straight: he thinks "the new look" and its waste of material and nice knees is pretty stupid.

At National Tomorrow

London Success Opening Here

TOMORROW NIGHT at the National sees one of the few wartime "postwar" dreams come true. A week after its closing in London after a year's run, the original company will play the first American performance of "The Winslow Boy."

NEWELL

The players sailed for the States immediately after their final London curtain and will arrive in the Capital this afternoon for a run-through in the E st. theater which will be their home for two weeks.

Only one member of the original company will not be on hand—Frank Cellier, kept from a longtime desire to return to the States only by illness. Cellier sent word that only real illness could keep him from the pleasures of American food.

Replacing him is Alan Webb, an actor-director whose most recent staging was for London's current "Peace in Our Time," Noel Cowards latest play. A former member of the Old Vic-Sadler's Wells Company, he's acted twice in this country, in Coward's "Tonight at 8:30" and "George and Margaret."

Terence Rattigan's drama concerns a father's stirring efforts to clear his son's name after the latter had been wrongfully expelled from a naval academy. The drama won last season's Ellen Terry Award, British counterpart of our Pulitzer Prize.

While the phrase "Atlantis Productions," appearing as sponsors of the play is new, it is that in name only. The firm is a familiar alignment of the Theater Guild, H. M. Tennenent, Ltd., and John C. Wilson, whose previous offering in Washington was last season's "Love for Love," with the John Gielgud Company. Under their new banner the trio is expected to collaborate frequently in future transatlantic theatrical traffic.

Newell in Title Role

The title role is being played by Michael Newell. This 16-year-old actor had only one previous stage part before his success as Ronnie Winslow—in Thornton Wilder's "The Happy Journey to Trenton and Camden."

The production also is the second in the current series of Theater Guild-American Theater Society subscription plays. There will be the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Russian Sector Fares Best

Berlin Theater Thrives Amid Rubble of War

By Alfred Friendly

(Recently returned from a European tour for The Washington Post, Friendly adds this report on the Berlin theater to his previously published dispatches on weightier subjects).

THE discovery of thriving theaters in Berlin is a startling experience. One would as soon expect to come across a regatta at Carthage or a market day at Stonehenge.

For the external trappings of Berlin, as a city, are those of death. But in the middle of monumental ruins, of literally square miles of skeleton buildings and towering rubble, there is surprisingly vigorous dramatic activity.

The Russian sector of the city fares best, at least physically. By accident or design, that sector, otherwise damaged the most, has the most theater buildings still in more or less usable condition. Notably, there is the Deutsches Theater, custodian of the greatest tradition of German drama, locale of the most famous first nights, the most distinguished plays, the most gifted actors.

Currently, it is playing Carl Zuckmayer's "Der Hauptmann von Koepenick," an incisive tragi-comic satire of Prussian militarism, and a favorite German play for more than 20 years.

The theater is shabby, the revolving stage creaks, bomb damage is all too evident, the "orchestra" is a phonograph, and the cafe-bar is nonexistent, but the quality of acting and direction is in the first rank of any theater, anywhere.

Based on Dilemma

THE play is completely faithful to an actual historical event which reduced all Europe to hysterics in 1911. An old bum, with a prison record, finds himself unable to get a job without an official police permit to reside in a certain locality. And he cannot get the permit without first having a job.

Reduced to desperation by the impasse, he acquires a captain's uniform at a pawnshop, dresses up and commandeers a marching troop of soldiers. He successfully assails the town hall of a Berlin suburb, sends the burgomeister off to jail, and makes off with the municipality's documents and cash.

As the Kaiser himself observed at the time, such respect for a uniform could be found only in Germany—prewar Germany.

At the best theater in the American sector of the city, the Hebbel, Jean Anouilh's "Euridike" is being played. An ultramodern number, its mystic subtleties are such that this reporter is convinced he couldn't have understood it had it been played in basic English, much less German translated from the French.

The star, playing with a depth of feeling which penetrated even the linguistic difficulties under which this observer labored, is Bettina Moissi, daughter of the famed Alexander Moissi, known to a decade of Salzburg Festival visitors.

Preceding these productions, the biggest recent hits in Berlin were two American plays, "The Skin of Our Teeth" and "The Voice of the Turtle." The latter, American theater-goers in Berlin declare, was more subtly interpreted there even than on Broadway.

The Russian Turkey

THE biggest turkey on the Berlin stage, it is amusing to note, was "The Russian Question," a play by Konstantin Simonov, which was reputed to have held Moscow audiences spellbound, and won the Stalin prize. In Berlin, however, where it was dutifully performed in the Russian sector, it was acclaimed most charitably as a monumental bore. The actors went through their parts like good soldiers but seemed pretty embarrassed by the whole thing.

In case you have forgotten the dispatches from Moscow when Anybody Listening?

Film on Radio Is Mild Polemic

By John Crosby

HAVING participated rather innocently in the "March of Time" film about radio called "Is Everybody Listening" (now running at the Warner Theater), it's somewhat embarrassnig to comment on it, I'll try to be as Olympian as possible. Historically speaking—and that's as Olympian as anything ever gets around here—the "March of Time" documentary on radio is the continuation of a polemic directed against radio since early 1946 by press, pulpit, literature ("The Hucksters," "Aurora Dawn," "The Big Noise"), the movies ("The Hucksters" again), educational and civic groups and ordinary listeners.

Again speaking historically, it's interesting to note that the film was among the mildest of all the polemics. It at least attempted to present both the good and the bad in radio and the major portion of the film was devoted to pure journalism, explaining rather than railing against radio.

In the light of these facts, it's odd that the film should have stirred up quite a rumpus in the industry. As the picture was being made, the National Broadcasting Co. got into a bit of a panic and issued a directive (or perhaps it was just a memorandum) warning its troops not to cooperate. "Why," said NBC in effect, "should we assist in an effort to beat our brains out?" The memorandum (or directive) came too late. By that time most of NBC's prize comedians had posed for their pictures.

What's All the Fuss?

Now that the film is open for inspection (it hasn't reached my home town of Oconomowoc, Wis., yet, so I assume it's still doing the rounds), it's hard to see what the fuss is about.

Much of the film is factual rather than editorial. It points out that comedians are the most popular entertainers on the air, that Hooper is high priest of the industry (though his findings are sometimes questioned), that radio has been guilty of lapses of taste, and that radio has done some horrible things with its give-away shows and its soap operas but has also contributed much to the Nation's culture and education with its symphonies and documentaries and news programs. Few of these points are open to argument.

The picture, it must be admtited, had one glaring weakness which was immediately seized upon by every one in the industry.

The portrayal of a sponsor who was more interested in singing commercials than in the program he sponsored was so badly overdone that it lacked any semblance of reality. On the other hand, the portrayal of a give-away show which sounded like an even more badly done lampoon, was a filming of an actual program (Tiny Ruffner and his "Better Half"). In radio, it's hard to tell where reality stops and lampoon begins, and "March of Time," I think, may be pardoned for not detecting this hairline distinction.

Radio, Sometimes

THE portrayal of large advertisers as a combination of tyrant and idiot has gone too far, I confess, but radio is occasionally as guilty as anyone else in this matter. The other night on "Curtain Time" (that's one of your shows, NBC), a young slip of a girl tackled an old ogre of an advertiser and within a matter of minutes had him cooing like a dove.

This was accomplished by tying a gray sock filled with goose grease around his neck to cure a sore throat. In gratitude for this messy remedy, which I'm sure is not indorsed by the American Medical Association, he increased his account by another 10 million or so. NBC, in this case, was guilty not only of overstatement but also of biting the hand that feeds it.

Hiller Makes 'The Heiress' A Good Show

By Jack O'Brian

NEW YORK, Oct. 4 (AP).—Among the four shows which got the fall theater season off to its belated but busy start, only one, "The Heiress," a dramatization by Ruth and Augustus Goetz of Henry James' novel, "Washington Square," does right by the dignified artistic standards of the Broadway boards.

Among the others were "I Gotta Get Out," which got out after four performances; "Our Lan'," a respectable, well-acted but disappointing drama about post-Civil War slaves; and a downright ridiculous paean of admiration for the thinkers of the far left, called "How I Wonder."

"The Heiress," previously known as "Washington Square," under the producership of Oscar Serlin, was headed for Broadway last season, but came a cropper during its tryout tour when the road critics found it generally at fault. Jed Harris, one of the erratic but definite stage geniuses, saw it, recognized that the fault was in the casting, and with Fred Finklehoffe, who was to produce it again under Harris' direction, flew to London to sign Wendy Hiller, the celebrated British film and stage star, for the central role.

Fortunately, Miss Hiller is everything the play doctor ordered.

The play is somewhat less of an accomplishment than are Miss Hiller's playing and Jed Harris' knowing direction.

About the Horses

THE rest, briefly:

"I Gotta Get Out" was written by Ben Sher and Joseph Fields. The plot concerns horse racing and bookmakers.

"Our Lan'," by Theodore Ward, came to Broadway after it had been viewed downtown at the Henry Street settlement last season, at which time some of the wandering critics saw something in it which resembled the stuff of which hits are made. That something admirable was in it still is discernible at this post-premiere point, but not enough to merit more than admiration for the author's promising talents.

"How I Wonder," by Donald Ogden Stewart, produced by Ruth Gordon and her husband, Carson Kanin, arrived to set the week's record for the ridiculous.

Aiming its heaviest ammunition at "big business" as the villian, it misses its mark, and despite the handsome production it still remains a silly soap box peroration.

Rodeo-Circus Run Opens on Tuesday

Nancy Christie, left, and Gale Thomas are shown here indulging in what you might term a bit of horseplay if that were your idea of something good. The girls will appear in the rodeo-circus opening Tuesday at Uline Arena

LARRY SUNBROCK, one of the highest powered ballyhoo boys since P. T. Barnum, brings his rodeo and circus to Uline Arena for a six-day engagement Tuesday.

Daily performances will be at 2:30 and 8:30 p. m. through October 12.

Cowboy movie star Ken Maynard and his horse, Tarzan, will appear in a riding and roping exhibition, and Maynard will call the square dances and give an exhibition of marksmanship. The Western film star will give away a real cowboy pony at each performance.

The rodeo-circus will offer 52 acts requiring 2 hours and 30 minutes to produce.

One of the most popular numbers will be the antics of Big Syd, the wild Brahma bull, which has tossed off all comers for three years. A cash prize of $1000 will be offered any spectator giving the fiery animal a qualified 10-second ride.

Over 200 rodeo contestants from the United States, Canada, Mexico, Cuba and South America are to compete for $7000 in cash prizes and will be challenged by fierce livestock. Gene Staples, the world champion all-around cowboy from Ardmore, Okla., and Joe Evans, 1945 champion from Miles City, Mont., are numbered among these contestants.

Sixteen cowgirls will bid for supremacy in the bronc and trick riding events.

King Kovaz and his troupe of Hollywood Daredevils, the famed Rudinoff society horses and outstanding trapeze trampoline and clown acts will fill out the program of entertainment.

Tickets for all performances are on sale at Uline Arena and at Liggett's Drug Store, 14th and H nw.

Barter Troupe Offering '12th Night' Tomorrow

THE Alexandria Junior Chamber of Commerce will sponsor three of the five plays to be presented in Alexandria this season by the Barter Theater; the Rotary Club and the American Association of University Women will sponsor one each. Dates are October 6 (tomorrow), November 3, December 15, March 22, and April 30. All plays will be presented at 8 p. m. in the auditorium of George Washington High School.

The Junior Chamber is sponsoring "Twelfth Night" tomorrow. Tickets are on sale at the William E. Lee Co., the Service Tire & Appliance Co., or Cohen's Quality Shop, on King st. or from any "Jaycee."

The Barter Theater, State Theater of Virginia, launched its second annual Statewide tour with simultaneous openings in Covington and Martinsville on September 16.

The two companies, which have been preparing their repertories in Abingdon since May, will continue on the road through next April, with 450 engagements in Virginia and 14 other states.

Six different plays will be trouped during the season, all selected from the 12 produced in Abingdon this summer.

Two of the gayest costume comedy-dramas of the theatrical library, Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest" and William Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" have been named as opening productions. They will be trouped throughout the Virginia area for more than two months and then through the South.

The Wilde comedy will be given its road premiere in Martinsville under the sponsorship of the Community Theater, and Shakespeare's perennial favorite will be displayed in Covington under the joint sponsorship of five clubs.

Gielgud to Do 'Crime and Punishment'

John Gielgud, the British star whose revival of Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest" was one of the real highlights of the past season, will be seen here this season in the dramatization of Dostoievsky's novel "Crime and Punishment," which he has played so successfully in London. It will get under way when Gielgud completes his current job of directing "Medea," starring Judith Anderson.

Scandinavia Will See 'Brigadoon'

The Scandinavian rights to the musical show hit "Brigadoon" have been acquired by Arvid Englind, who is planning to present it in Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland and Iceland.

Dates Set for Tour of 'Show Boat'

The dates for the tour of "Show Boat" have been set as follows: October 20-25, Hartford, Conn.; October 17-November 15, Boston; November 17-December 13, Philadelphia; pre-Christmas week layoff; December 22-January 3, Pittsburgh; January 5-10, Cincinnati; January 12-17, Cleveland. After that, Chicago for a run.

Films to Show Nation at Work

NEW YORK, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—The Motion Picture Association of America for a quarter of a century was known only as "The Hays Office," and seemed to be concerned mainly with regulating screen lovemaking.

Next Saturday 200 movie screens throughout the country will release the first of a series of shorts designed to promote the American way of life and jointly sponsored by the MPAA and its president, Eric A. Johnston.

The first short of the series is "Power Behind the Nation," made in Technicolor by Warner Brothers. Others of the series may be based on ideas originated by Johnston and farmed out for production strictly to his specifications.

"Power Behind the Nation" is a hard-hitting, fast-moving film that gives a narration-connected mellange of the agricultural and industrial activities that have made the nation great. Only 10 per cent of the shots were taken from the library.

The film opens with a brief sequence in Johnston's New York office, in which he introduces the picture in remarks to reporters at a simulated press conference.

All profits from the Johnston shorts, which may run to a dozen or more, will go to charities. The money from "Power Behind the Nation" will be donated to the Damon Runyon Memorial (Cancer) Fund, which has been guaranteed at least $50,000 from the film.

A few of the groups that have endorsed the film are the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, International Federation of Catholic Alumnae Film Committee and United Daughters of the Confederacy.

Berlin Theater Is Flourishing

the play was opened there, it is a harrowing portrayal of an American newspaperman who is forbidden to write the truth about Russia by an ogre of a publisher whose face appears only intermittently from behind a whisky glass.

About the only Germans who enjoyed it, it seems, were a small scattering of individuals in the Russian sector. These demonstrate their love of the holy Marxist motherland by affecting the costume of the off-center embroidered-choker Russian shirt.

For them, like their ideological brothers throughout the world, Anything (Russian) Goes.

Big Backdrop Used For Film 'Paleface'

Covering the wall of Paramount's largest sound stage where "The Paleface" is being shot is the biggest panorama backdrop created by the studio's scenic arts department since "So Proudly We Hail" was filmed five years ago.

Constructed for scenes representing exteriors, the hand-painted backdrop covers 18,550 square feet of wall space. The "So Proudly We Hail" backdrop, largest ever created at Paramount, covered 19,750 square feet.

Starring Bob Hope and Jane Russell, "The Paleface" is a Technicolor travesty on wild West epics.

Old Brittany Festival Filmed

For the first time in the history of motion pictures, "The Pardons," a century-old Brittany folk festival, was filmed for sequence in M. G. M.'s "Desire Me," starring Greer Garson, at the Palace Theater.

Arthur Hornblow, producer, searched through more than 500 reels of documentary, historical and newsreel films, but was unable to find it had been previously screened. The ceremonies are an intimate part of the life of small Brittany fishing villages. Several hundred extras, a circus, food and fun concessions were used in the first filming of these festivities.

Sportscaster Signed

Sam Balter, sports announcer, has been signed to write and narrate basketball game sequences for "Big Town Scandal," Pine-Thomas production for Paramount. Balter, director of sports for Station KLAC, Los Angeles, has been heard on a coast-to-coast sports program for four years. Philip Reed and Hillary Brooke costar in "Big Town Scandal," with Stanley Clements heading the supporting cast.

Calm Before Concert Deluge

Week of Religious Music

By Paul Hume

Miklos Schwalb plays at National Gallery tonight

In this, the final week before the 1947-48 deluge of concerts hits town, music of, in, and for the church is in prominent position.

The National Institute of Church Music is scheduled for Foundry Methodist Church tomorrow, continuing through next Sunday. Under the direction of Oliver S. Beltz, with assistance from Dean Robert G. McCutchan, Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, Justin Lawrie, R. Deane Shure, Warner Lawson and others, the institute will do a great service if it points the way to higher standards of performance and repertoire in church music today. Without in any way turning places of worship into concert halls, much can and should be done to make decent the musical offerings placed before the Lord from Sunday to Sunday in Washington.

NO MORE striking illustration of the spiritual and musical quality desirable in church music could be given than the works which are to be heard in the course of the celebration of the Solemn Eucharist in Washington Cathedral Thursday morning at 11 during the Washington Catholic Congress of the Episcopal Church.

For the prelude, Paul Callaway, organist and choirmaster of the Cathedral, has chosen a Passacaglia for strings and organ by Ellis Kohs, Samuel Barber's Adagio for Strings, and an Introduction and allegro for organ and strings by Walter Piston.

The music for the mass is William Byrd's four-part setting, to be sung a capella by the boys and men of the Cathedral choir. "Sing We Merrily Unto God" by Cecil Effinger comes at the offertory, with Mozart's "Ave Verum" as the communion motet.

From the fourth organ concerto of Handel, the allegro provides the service postlude. With Callaway directing the string players and choir, Wayne Dirksen, assistant organist of the Cathedral, will play the organ.

This is no ordinary list of music for a religious service. One must comment on the standard maintained throughout. More than that, it is pertinent in our musical life to note the equal division between old and contemporary music, a factor often overlooked in church music today. Ellis Kohs, now in his early 30's, was stationed near Washington during part of the war. His Passacaglia for strings and organ was commissioned by E. Power Biggs less than two years ago.

Samuel Barber's Adagio is the best known work of one of America's most prominent young composers, for Barber too is in his thirties. To Biggs goes credit also for the commissioning of Piston's Introduction and allegro, one of the finest works for organ and small ensemble of our decade.

Cecil Effinger, at present a music critic and teacher in Denver, is only 33. His anthem to be sung at the offertory was written on commission from the Wellesley Conference of the Episcopal Church in the summer of 1946. In contrast to, and of the same excellence as these modern works are the mass of the great sixteenth century William Byrd, and the shorter compositions of Mozart and Handel.

The worship of Almighty God is assuredly enhanced by the offering of such music as this, while the forward-going life of the church is well served with the inclusion of vigorous, new music.

EARLIER in the week, the Cathedral will be host to Clarence Snyder, organist and choirmaster of the First Congregational Church in Montclair, N. J. Playing this afternoon's recital at 5, Snyder lists French music by Gigout, Franck, Dupre, and Durufle, and German writings of Schumann and Brahms.

Tomorrow night at Foundry Church, as the opening concert of the Institute of Church Music (see above), Robert Ruckman and Glenn Carow will play an organ and piano recital including the Tschaikowsky B Flat Minor, the Mendelssohn G Minor, and the Rubinstein D Minor (first movement only) concertos. This music has, of course, nothing to do with church.

Thursday night the institute and the Washington Chapter of the American Guild of Organists present Robbie Campbell at Foundry Church in the fine program Miss Campbell played recently in Arlington.

This afternoon's Phillips Gallery recital is by Willa Semple, Washington pianist. An imaginative program lists early English songs arranged for piano by Anis Fuleihan, sixteenth century dances edited by George Copeland, and sonatas by Scarlatti, Arne, and Campbell-Tipton. Shorter works from Viani, Berger, Paul Bowles and Samuel Barber conclude the recital.

Richard Bales and the National Gallery Sinfonietta return tonight with Miklos Schwalb, pianist. An all-Beethoven program includes the Prometheus overture, the Fourth Symphony (a most happy choice) and the E Flat piano concerto, fondly known as the "Emperor." If the concert is as exciting and well-played as last week's it will be another memorable occasion.

The Friday Morning Music Club under the presidency of Kathryn Hill Rawls announces a number of important items. Its piano group meets October 7, its organ group the 14th, the composers also gather the 14th, the singers on the 28th, and a student members' tea on the 31st. For information on all these goings-on call Ordway 4524.

Fourth and last in the concerts sponsored by the musicians' union is scheduled for Wednesday evening at 8:30 in Central High School Auditorium. The orchestra under the direction of Toby Tyler with Burrus Williams as soloist lists among other things the Warsaw Concerto. Given to the public by the members of the union local, the concert is made possible by royalties from the record and transcription fund.

Begins Here October 28

Philadelphia Orchestra Has Bright Soloist List

SYMPHONY orchestras of neighboring cities have a happy custom of playing concerts in each other's home towns.

ORMANDY

Thus the National Symphony Orchestra now plays nine concerts in Baltimore, the Boston Symphony gives series in New York, and the Philadelphia Orchestra plays eight concerts here.

It is a good thing for a community such as Washington to hear other great orchestras in a season. Broader repertoire, varying standards of playing, and the mere physical fact of more good music in a large city make for a stimulated musical fare.

This year's Philadelphia Orchestra concerts begin on October 21, when Eugene Ormandy directs a soloistless program of Bach, Brahms and Strauss. Yet to say soloistless when Strauss' Don Quixote is listed is absurd, for no more eloquent lines for solo cello have been penned than those which voice the musical sentiments of the lonely Don.

Soloists for the concerts include Duopianists Luboshutz and Nemenoff, Pianists Serkin, Brailowsky and Firkusny, and Violinists Thibaud and Francescatti. If Ormandy will match the luster of his soloists with repertoire of exciting choice, we shall have a fine series of programs from the Philadelphians. Certainly no other orchestra quite matches the peculiarly opulent tone which they produce, though there are times when the opulence is both overlaid and out of place.

Philadelphia's Orchestra does not match the National Symphony in the number of works of American composers played in a single season, either in total numbers of works, or on a percentage basis. Nevertheless, Ormandy has a number of interesting new works in his head for the coming year, and we would like to feel that he considered Washington and the new pieces worthy of each other, especially the excerpts from "Wozzeck."

Aiding in the conducting duties for the concerts, Alexander Hilsberg, concertmaster of the orchestra, will again direct one program. This, interestingly enough, will be the concert on which Jacques Thibaud returns to Washington after more than a decade's absence. It was Hilsberg who conducted the orchestra in one of its two best concerts last season.

Soothe Eye While Music Plays

New York, Oct. 4 (AP).—Something to soothe the restless eye while music plays has been developed by Werner Janssen, New York-born conductor, who is taking over the Portland (Oreg.) Symphony Orchestra this season.

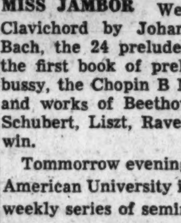
With the 90-piece Janssen Symphony of Los Angeles, he recorded six orchestral pieces popular with movie audiences and then with Photographer Alan Stensvold took shots of natural beauty spots to accompany them.

At a recent private showing here, there were Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor along with the Bryce Canyon; Debussy's "Clair de Lune" with, naturally, innumerable moonlit acres, and Debussy's "La Cathedrale Engloutie" with water dashing on rocks or rolling placidly and the submerged cathedral itself.

There is a tendency to be literal: for grand sweeping passages in the scores, there are sweeping landscapes; when violins shimmer, leaves dance in sunlight; when the double basses croak, the camera drops you way down to the bottom of a gorge.

Agi Jambor Plays Tonight Over WINX

AGI JAMBOR, Hungarian pianist now living in Washington, begins two series this week, both of which are innovations in local music.



MISS JAMBOR

Tonight at 7 Miss Jambor will play the first of 13 half-hour concerts over Station WINX. During these recitals, regular listeners will hear the entire first book of the Well Tempered Clavichord by Johann Sebastian Bach, the 24 preludes of Chopin, the first book of preludes by Debussy, the Chopin B Minor Sonata and works of Beethoven, Brahms, Schubert, Liszt, Ravel and Gershwin.

Tommorrow evening at 7 o'clock American University inaugurates a weekly series of seminars on problems of playing the piano, and piano repertoire, with Miss Jambor as pianist and teacher. Various piano masterpieces will be studied, played in whole or in part, and commented upon by members of the class, the public, which is invited (subject to a nominal fee), and Miss Jambor herself. A similar course for singers, which must unfortunately be held at the same time, is to be taught by Edith Henry of New York City.

Coming to this country in March of this year, Agi Jambor has appeared twice in Washington, twice with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra and made her New York Town Hall debut last Thursday. She is scheduled to open the Friday Morning Music Club recitals early in November, and is returning to Europe briefly in January and February for appearances in Scandinavian countries and over the BBC.

Six Winners Named In Negro Contest

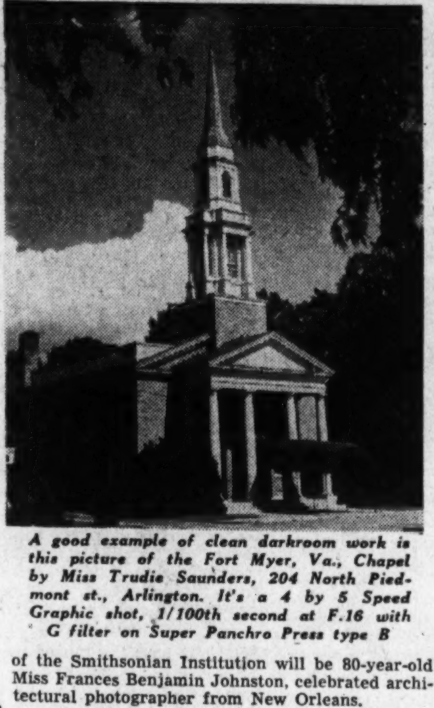
The six young winners of the national Negro contest are Allen Brown, pianist; Theodore Hines, bass-baritone, and Lawrence Mellon, pianist, all of New York; Oland Gaston, pianist, Chicago; Louise Parker, contralto, Philadelphia, and Ruth C. Stewart, soprano, who studied at Florida A. and M. College, Hampton and Columbia.

These winners will be paired in Town Hall recitals in New York, the first of them November 11.

Taking Pictures

Here's How Fan Can Set Up Darkroom in His Own Home

By Ollie Atkins



A good example of clean darkroom work is this picture of the Fort Myer, Va., Chapel by Miss Trudie Saunders, 204 North Piedmont st., Arlington. It's a 4 by 5 Speed Graphic shot, 1/100th second at F.16 with G filter on Super Panchro Press type B

THE first developing outfit I ever had was a simple kodak affair with instructions so brief the process beyond the "hypo" stage went undescribed. I almost gave up the idea of home developing when my films were covered with hypo salt and the prints faded the same day I made them.

Today's outfits are fine for the beginner. They begin in price at $3.50. But I am listing below the materials which will completely equip your home darkroom for developing and contact printing. It costs a little more, but you'll get better results than any developing unit can offer.

Here are the minimum requirements for all chemicals and equipment.

1 gallon jar (prepared powders) kodak microdol

1 gallon jar to hold the prepared microdol

1 gallon size (prepared powders) kodak acid fixing powder

1 gallon jar to hold the prepared hypo (acid fixing powder)

1 roll film tank (adjustable type or made to fit your size roll film)

1 interval timer

1 yellow safelight (for contact printing)

1 contact printer

1 gross contact printing paper, normal grade (same size as your film)

1 gross contact printing paper, contrast grade (same size as your film)

1 gallon jar (prepared powders) kodak dektol

1 gallon jar to hold prepared dektol

1 thermometer to check all temperatures at 68 degrees

3 trays at least 8 by 10 inches

2 ferrotype plates at least 8 by 10 inches

2 blotters, same size as ferrotype plates (or newspapers will do)

1 print roller (medium size)

With this equipment, and by following the directions on each of the labels of the chemicals and checking with any photographic folder on how to develop and print, you can make your own prints.

With one roll of film and the above equipment, it would take an hour for the developing, fixing and washing of the film, 2 hours to dry the film, an hour to print, develop, fix and wash the prints and two hours to dry the prints. Six hours for the entire process. Of course, by putting through several rolls you cut the time sharply.

Many commercially packed units cost less than the outfit I have described. I am not condemning these. My suggested unit will work for everyone, and from this basic outfit any photographer can change his methods to suit his taste.

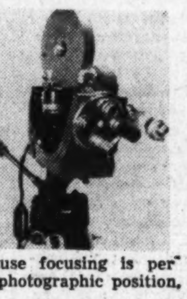
Speaker and judge at the next meeting of the National Photographic Society Wednesday at 8:15 p. m. in the auditorium of the National Museum of the Smithsonian Institution will be 80-year-old Miss Frances Benjamin Johnston, celebrated architectural photographer from New Orleans.



GOVERNMENT and institutional photographers will be interested to learn that the new Bell & Howell "Specialist" is currently on display by John Waller, manager of the Bell & Howell Co. here at 816 13th st. nw. This is a 16-mm. semiprofessional camera. It is motor driven and has a four-lens turret with lens centers widely spaced to permit the use of a variety of long and short-focus lenses without optical interference. The shiftover feature permits rapid and extremely accurate visual focusing—with further advantage of complete elimination of viewfinder parallax errors because focusing is performed with the lens in its photographic position.

THERE is one rule in photography that should never be broken.

Don't show off an unmounted picture!

If a photograph is worth printing, it is worth finishing, and it isn't finished until it is trimmed, mounted, spotted, titled if it requires titling, and ready to present as an accomplishment worthy of the work given to making it.

Consideration for Viewer

BUT when it is dragged out of the drawer all rolled up, and passed around so that its corners have to be flattened out and held down on someone's lap; and when the print is marked up with fingers that have been picking cherries out of Manhattans—then not even a good picture pleases any one but the purblind maker.

On the other hand, if it is displayed as it should be, on its own neat mount, or in an attractive modern album, even a mediocre print will gain immeasurably, because it has proper consideration for the viewer, who is, after all, the sine qua non of photography.

The best prints deserve enlargement and separate mountings. A plain, white mounting board with a matte surface dresses up a photograph in presentable style, and it doesn't need adornment, die-cut insets, intermediate layers of toned paper, roughed edges or fancy trimmings. All that's necessary is to select a mount of proportionate size, and get the print mounted on it with parrallel sides and square corners, stuck so it will stay.

The sticking-down is a job. There are two principal ways to do it: with rubber cement or mounting tissue.

Rubber cement is highly satisfactory if it is neatly done. It isn't as permanent as mounting tissue, but it lasts a long time, and with reasonable care stains around the edges can be avoided.

Mounting the Print

TO SET off the print properly, the mount should be roughly half again as large as the print. For example, an 11 by 14 print looks right on a 16 by 20 mount. With margins trimmed off, either on a trimming board or with the aid of a metal rule and a razor-sharp knife, the print is placed in position on the mount.

Ordinarily, it should be placed toward the top of the board, so that side and top margins are equal, and the bottom margin wider. Thus, if an 11 by 14 vertical picture is mounted this way on a 16 by 20 mount, the top and side margins will be about 2½ inches wide, and the bottom space 3½ inches wide.

When the exact position is located, the corners are marked with light pencil dots. The cement is applied both to the back of the print and the surface of the mount. A flat, narrow pancake spatula is a good tool for cementing, but don't let the lady of the house see you taking it. In the spreading process, the edges of the print, laid face down, can be used as a guide along the boundaries of the area the print is to occupy. In this manner, excess cement will not spread beyond the borders of the photograph.

New Pamphlet Treats Color In All Phases of Photography

A BOOKLET covering every major phase of color photography, from the basic properties of color itself to the making of prints, was published last week by Ansco of Binghamton, N. Y., manufacturers of photographic materials and equipment.

Titled "Color Photography Made Easy," the 87-page booklet, one of a series of publications by the company, and the first devoted solely to color, is priced at 50 cents a copy. It is concerned primarily with the use of Ansco color film for transparencies and Ansco color printon for prints.

The booklet, fully illustrated with color shots, is written so as to be clearly understandable to amateurs making their first attempts at full-color picture taking and processing. It is divided into six main sections.

The first describes picture-taking methods, both indoors and out, for portraits, make-up and special uses of color film. The second section is on the processing of film. The third describes the choice and correct uses of filters with color film. A fourth section tells how to make prints on printon, and the fifth describes the steps in making separation negatives for other printing processes.

Eastman Announces New Developing Plan

A new series of mathematical equations has been worked out by the Eastman Kodak Co. for swift determination of the extent to which developer and other solutions are intermixed from one tank to another in continuous processing systems, the company has announced.

The formulae are useful mainly for motion-picture processing, commercial photo finishing X-ray processing.

Peerless Catalogue Has 4333 Items

Helpful data on still and motion picture photography are included in the new 1948 catalogue of photographic equipment and accessories published by the Peerless Camera Stores, Inc., of 138 East 44th st., New York.

Informative articles scattered through the 100-page book are printed in a special type face for easy identification. The catalogue contains 4333 products for photographers. It is printed in rotogravure with covers in three colors.

Copies may be obtained by writing to the store, Department M. O.

New Synchro-Sunlight Pamphlet Available

The latest edition of a pamphlet on "synchro-sunlight" photography, giving instructions on how to combine flashlight with sunlight for balanced pictures, is available for free distribution at the Kalart Co. of Stamford, Conn.

It will be mailed on request to the company, Department 128-E, Stamford.

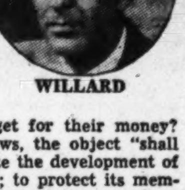
And Takes Its Choice

Radio Spends Its 650 G's

By Sonia Stein

(This is the last in a series of articles about the National Association of Broadcasters.)

LAST year the National Association of Broadcasters took in well over $650,000 and spent almost all of it. This whacking sum could be collected because the association includes nearly 75 per cent of all stations in the country. Measured dollarwise, the organization represents more than 90 per cent of the radio business.



WILLARD

(Stations pay on a pro rata basis, computed according to the amount of business they do.)

And what do they get for their money? According to the by-laws, the object "shall be to foster and promote the development of the art of broadcasting; to protect its members in every lawful and proper manner from injustices and unjust exactions; to do all things necessary and proper to encourage and promote customs and practices which will strengthen and maintain the broadcasting industry to the end that it may best serve the public."

These objectives are achieved partly through the president's office, which gets $85,000 to cover its expenses.

Willard Radio Veteran

IN addition to Judge Justin Miller, who left the bench to become NAB's president because the job was "so challenging," the president's office includes A. D. (Jess) Willard, jr., who assumed his executive vice president duties when the judge came into office two years ago this month.

Willard, who was manager of WTOP when it was WJSV, and was later manager of a Charlotte, N. C., station, made radio history by pioneering the first morning musical clock program in his announcing days.

His main duty is implementing the judge's decisions, but according to his official biography he is "an enthusiastic champion of advertising as the essential guardian of speech freedom in all forms of mass communication." If he makes a convincing argument of this, he is surely worth his weight in gold to the dues-paying membership.

Publicity Conscious

NEARLY $80,000 went into public relations. Radio, being a public medium, subject to licensing by the Government and depending entirely on public and sponsor opinion for its livelihood, is acutely press and public relations conscious.

Robert Richards, public relations director, says the NAB tries not to show a false face. By being "completely candid" they soon get a kickback if something is wrong, and can use it as a guide in making corrections.

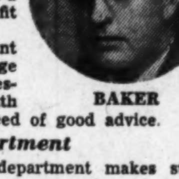
Richards' background sounds like an idealized list of qualifications for the job. Newspaperman, radio announcer and newscaster, production director of a station, advertising copywriter and wartime assistant in the radio branch of the Office of Censorship, Richards was most recently editorial director of Broadcasting magazine, which reports every flicker of the industry's eyelash.

The legal department and employe-employer relations department work like little beavers on the phase of operations described as activity to "protect its members . . . from injustices and unjust exactions."

The legal department drew up legislation which NAB hopes to have adopted in place of the White bill to regulate Government's control over radio. Benefit of all legal mistakes and all legal coups ever pulled by any station accrue to any member station which asks NAB's advice on its problems.

The department keeps its ear to the ground on all legislative matters pertaining to radio—taxes, labor relations, libel, copyright, lotteries, antitrust laws, advertising practices—and publishes a "Legislative Digest."

The employe-employer relations department, just over a year old, keeps members posted on developments in union-station relations, living costs, wage scale trends, and the application of labor legislation to radio. Bulletins tell how to arbitrate, how to face unionization, how to use profit-sharing and employe benefit plans.



BAKER

The department answers an average of 125 special questions each month for stations in need of good advice.

Delving Department

THE research department makes studies for the other departments and does research for the general edification of stations, and ultimately the public. For example, recent sampling of radio logs of representative stations produced statistics which, the NAB says with glee, do not tally with the derogatory report issued by the FCC in 1945. NAB says stations are not so crassly commercial, so lacking in public service programs, as the FCC contended.

This department, headed by Dr. Kenneth Baker, who was formerly on the staff of Ohio State University, conducts the periodic NORC survey. The first survey showed that people thought radio compared favorably with newspapers, movies and churches in fulfilling its duties toward the public.

The research director is also chairman of Broadcast Measurement Bureau's technical committee. BMB is a new organization which measures "audience." Accepted as the official measurement of a station's power to reach potential buyers, a BMB report is frequently demanded by prospective sponsors. A representative of Bristol-Myers, old and enthusiastic buyers of radio time, claims he often refuses to consider a station which cannot offer a BMB report. Interested stations who subscribe to this service pay additional fees.

Space-Taker

THE broadcast advertising department takes the most space in the annual report for a resume of its activities. In general, it tries to "serve the sales and promotional needs of the industry' 'by helping stations indoctrinate their sales staffs, by distributing films, speeches and books on advertising techniques, etc.

Not yet 6 months old, the Program Department has helped devise the Standards of Practice code, and has provided material for programs to combat juvenile delinquency.

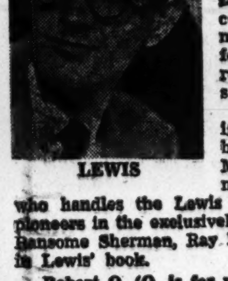
The department's general aim is to improve program standards and to bring about a closer working relationship between program and sales departments.

The NAB also provides engineering information to its members and now has an FM department to promote that new phase of the industry.

What's on The Radio

Lewis in New Time Spot On WTOP Today at 2

"A RADIO comedian is the sound man for a laugh," according to Robert Q. Lewis, who moves into the 2 p. m. time slot over WTOP-CBS this afternoon. "And he's a slave to laughs because his success depends on them."



LEWIS

This doesn't appeal to Robert Q. one little bit since he belongs by instinct to that new group of comedians who "hate to work for yaks and boffs." Their humor is pure radio stuff, "not a bastardization of burlesque and stage comedy forced into the new medium," and it usually brings forth a chuckle instead of the round, ringing guffaws the sponsors love to hear.

Lewis classes himself for style, if not for merit, with such "radio babies" as Garry Moore, Henry Morgan and Jack Paar. Goodman Ace, CBS comedy supervisor who handles the Lewis show, is rated as one of the pioneers in the exclusively radio comedy field along with Ransome Sherman, Ray Knight and Colonel Stoopnagle, in Lewis' book.

Robert Q. (Q. is for why not?) has been on and off the air since he appeared on a kiddies' program at the age of 8, as a boy soprano. He used to give disc jockey shows at his home. All the courses he took at University of Michigan were selected for what they could do to help him in radio.

Lewis is pleased with his new time spot since it gives him "fresh territory." His only competition at that hour on Sunday is music or sports. When his show was on Saturday nights he had to buck other comedy programs.

The famous Pitkins will continue to appear in all the skits and Ruthie will still be on hand to bleat, "Don't fight it Robert. It's bigger than both of us," at the most inappropriate times.

Accustomed to doing daily shows (he did 15 minute daily programs for CBS this summer), Lewis now feels he has nothing to do and it "drives me crazy." So on the side he's building a musical show for an oldtime singer. He'd like to appear on Broadway himself, and predicts he'd use Bobby Clark's comedy technique—"burlesque the action and speak the words subtly."

Almost every time CBS moves "Robert Q. Lewis' Little Show," it gets bigger. Originally a 15-minute Saturday night feature, it spread to 25 minutes on Fridays, and finally became a 30-minute show when it went into the Saturday night 8:30 period. This time it'll stay at 30.

"SCREEN GUILD PLAYERS" returns tomorrow night at 10:30 with Ingrid Bergman and Bing Crosby recreating their roles in "Bells of St. Mary's." Bette Davis, Bob Hope, Brian Aherne and Dorothy Lamour are lined up for future broadcasts. Stars on this series turn their paychecks over to the Motion Picture Relief Fund for indigent actors. This is a WTOP-CBS show.

Also arriving Monday is the "CBS School of the Air" which will have a number of innovations this year. A five-a-week series heard at 5 p. m., the program is devoted to "Liberty Road" on Mondays, "Tales of Adventure" Tuesdays, "March of Science," "Gateways to Music" and "Opinion Please" the remaining days.

Saturday night at 9, Joan Davis, rated leading comedienne for four years in a row by Radio Daily's poll, begins a new series. Abe Burrows who is now tickling the populace with his own Saturday night show, will write the Davis program.

Story of Dr. West

The story of Dr. James West, one-time Washington orphan who convinced President Theodore Roosevelt that youthful lawbreakers should be tried in special juvenile courts, will be dramatized tomorrow night at 8 over WRC-NBC. Henry Fonda will play Dr. West.

Mrs. FDR Not On Here

The ABC forum broadcasts for which Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is moderator will not be carried locally. The broadcasts begin today at 12:30, but ABC's local affiliate already has commitments for that period.

Concert Hall Announces Another Good Series

IT IS time to talk again about Concert Hall Society. A year ago a series of records was described in the press of the country, and subscriptions for the series were invited. Slightly more expensive than the average plastic disc, the series was limited to a total of 2000 copies of each record.

After the first release, comments of glowing commendation began to pour in. Surface noise, so often a disturbing element in records, was reduced to its lowest point up to that time. Reproduction of instrumental tone was of unusual fidelity. And, much more important, a large number of works hitherto unrecorded were being placed in wax for a critical audience.

Concert Hall Society does not restrict itself to a particular group of recording artists but chooses the best musicians available to perform that portion of their repertoire to which they are most happily suited. Albums of great worth came forth containing music by Purcell, Stravinsky, Hindemith, Debussy, Samuel Barber, William Schuman and many more. The series was brilliantly successful, artistically, mechanically and economically.

NOW we have the announcement of a second series of recordings from this same society. Last year's 12 releases will be increased to 15, with the subscriber given the privilege of choosing any 12, should he not wish the entire series. Great names in music and in its performance are found in the selections chosen for this second recording season. The list includes:

Barber: Cello Sonata—Garbousova and Kahn; Hindemith: String Quartet No. 4—Guilet Quartet; Schubert: Piano Sonata No. 15 in C Major—Lev; Ravel: Violin and cello sonata—Shumsky and Greenhouse; Scarlatti: Sonatas—Kirkpatrick, harpsichordist; Stravinsky: Concertino for String Quartet—Gordon String Quartet; Weill: Whitman Songs—William Horne, tenor; Haydn: Flute and piano sonata—Le Roy and Loyonnet; American piano music by Blitzstein, Cowell, Dello Joio, Foss, Smit, played by the composers; Janacek: Concertino for piano, strings and wind instruments—Firkusny and ensemble; Milhaud: Symphonies for small orchestra—composer conducting; Dvorak: Quartet in C Major—Gordon Quartet; Dello Joio: Flute, cello, piano trio—Baker, Saidenberg, Hambro; Couperin: Suite of the Sixth Order—Loyonnet; Respighi: Violin sonata—Shumsky, Balsam.

That is a list well worth considering. Technical improvements in recording processes permit the society to release 3000 sets this year, but our guess is that the demand will be greater than before, and probably rapidly exceed the supply. For further enthusiasm, read on:

Beethoven: Scotch Songs. Richard Dyer-Bennet, tenor, with trio. Concert Hall Society, Ltd., release. It is not widely known, except among musicians of catholic tastes, that Beethoven interested himself in setting a number of Scotch and Irish poems. Concert Hall has already released a set of Irish songs in their unlimited series, with this same singer. Now we have what sounds to us to be the finest of their recordings yet from the standpoint of engineering and perfection of reproduction. The violin, cello and piano sound from discs of completely silent surfaces. Bennet's voice takes on an unwonted sympathy, and the songs emerge precisely as they must have gone into the microphone.

Debussy: Sonata for cello and piano. Raya Garbousova, cellist, with Artur Balsam, pianist. Concert Hall Society, Ltd., release. This first sonata of the three which ended Claude Debussy's creative life bears interesting comparison with the later violin sonata. The writing is more sustained, less nervous in rapid movements and more purely lyrical. It is not designed to exploit the technical resources of the cello (as if Debussy would ever write for so mundane a purpose), but rather presents it as one of the great singers among instruments.

Benny and Allen Return Tonight

WHEN it's hibernation time for the bears, it's blossom time for radio comedians. Jack Benny and Fred Allen both return tonight over WRC-NBC—Jack at 7 and Fred at 8:30. Earlier, when the "Quiz Kids" go on the air at 4 p. m., they will get some long-distance questions popped at them from from both Benny and Allen.

The hour-long "Ford Theater" has its premiere this afternoon at 5 over WRC-NBC with "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court." (See page 5, col. 7.)

Agi Jambor, famous Hungarian pianist, begins her 13-week series on WINX tonight at 7 with Chopin and Debussy selections. (See page 3, col. 2.)

"Within Our Gates," transcribed dramatic series which won the Distinguished Merit Award of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, is to be presented over WWDC and WWDC-FM Sundays at 11:15 p. m., beginning tonight with the life of Booker T. Washington. "Americans All" which formerly occupied that time moves into the 2:30 p. m. spot on WOOK today with a discussion on "Intercultural Education in District Schools."

The WTOP-CBS series, "Doorway to Life," which dramatizes psychological problems of childhood is moved into the 1:30 Sunday period today, and Robert Q. Lewis follows at 2. (See col. 1, this page.)

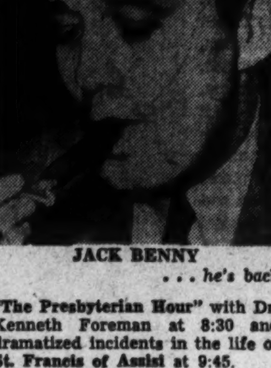
Alice Faye and Phil Harris resume their domestic comedy series at 7:30 p. m. over WRC-NBC and Ned Hassell's program of collector's items in the field of classical records, gets a new time (12:45 p. m.) and a new title ("Souvenir Theater") today on WMAL.

WWDC and WWDC-FM begin a "Salute to Radio" series today at 5:15 p. m., presenting transcriptions of programs featured on other independent stations throughout the country.

WINX and WINX-FM inaugurate two religious series this morning:



JACK BENNY
. . . he's back

"The Presbyterian Hour" with Dr. Kenneth Foreman at 8:30 and dramatized incidents in the life of St. Francis of Assisi at 9:45.

Mestrovic Works Show

Sculpture Show at Corcoran

By Jane Watson Crane

WHEN the contemporary Yugoslavian sculptor, Ivan Mestrovic, was granted the singular honor of a one-man show at the Metropolitan Museum in New York last spring, the attendant publicity resounded along the Potomac as well as the Hudson. Due to the pact made recently by the Metropolitan with other New York museums, his may well be the last show by a living artist to be held there.

The Mestrovic exhibit which opened yesterday at the Corcoran Gallery here is substantially the same as was seen in New York, with the exception of the big marble "Pieta," which involved too great a transportation problem. There is, however, a study of the work included, and even this makes comparison with the Michelangelo of the same title inevitable and unhappy.

The group consists entirely of work done since 1942. Included are six large reliefs in wood, sculptures in marble and bronze, and a series of drawings. With few exceptions, the subjects are religious. The work represents no departure from Mestrovic's earlier style, which is traditional. As art it offers nothing new. It stems from early Greek, Byzantine, and medieval sculpture. Mestrovic has written a study of Michelangelo, for whom his admiration is patent in his work; a more nearly contemporary association is with the work of Rodin.

Now Lives in U. S.

ACTUALLY this constitutes a reintroduction of Mestrovic's work in the United States, after a lapse of about 20 years. The artist, now in his sixties, recently came here to live and is at present head of a newly formed sculpture department at the University of Syracuse. He has made visits in the past, and had a big show at the Brooklyn Museum in 1925. His work is owned by a number of United States museums. The big equestrian group with mounted Indians in Grant Park in Chicago is his.

Since Mestrovic was always a prolific worker, the record of five years' accomplishment as seen here would not be remarkable for him, were it not that he was involved in such serious personal difficulties at the time.

When Germany and Italy overran Yugoslavia in 1941 Mestrovic was at Split, and when this was annexed by the Italians he moved to Zagreb. There he was arrested and held in prison until the end of January, 1942. His life was threatened because of his avowed Allied sympathies. Mainly due to intercession by the Vatican, he was released from prison and allowed to live and work in Zagreb until the spring of 1942. Subsequently he was ordered to Italy to take part in an art show at Venice. From there he went to Rome, where he stayed in a Croatian foundation under jurisdiction of the Vatican.

St. Francis, by Ivan Mestrovic, at the Corcoran

From Italy Mestrovic went to Switzerland, where he stayed until April, 1946. After a brief return to Rome, he left for the United States at the end of that year.

There is no hint of war in the sculpture, except that many of the works relate to human suffering in the abstract. Mestrovic is a super-craftsman and his sculpture is generally not emotional.

The Mestrovic exhibit will continue through October 26.

Bley Sketches Also Up

THE CORCORAN is also showing a series of war sketches by Fritz Bley, official German combat artist. These are straight black-and-white illustrations, quite impersonal, and generally more concerned with machines than men. Aside from their curiosity as an enemy record, their interest would seem to be mainly historical.

In addition to the two special exhibitions, visitors also have the opportunity to see the Gallery's permanent American collection, rearranged and installed in freshly decorated rooms.

Of particular interest to local artists is the announcement by the Corcoran of the artist-jury for the Second Exhibition of Work by Artists of Washington and Vicinity, to be held November 2 to 30. Three members from out of town will serve with Hermann Williams, jr., director, and Eleanor Swenson, associate curator—Isabel Bishop, Henry Hensche, and William Zorach. They were chosen from names suggested by the local artists themselves.

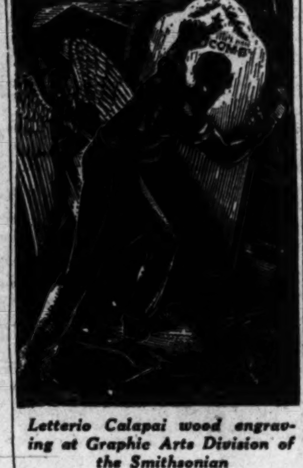
Art Notes

Child's Book Illustrations At Library

THE Public Library of the District of Columbia has an excellent and comprehensive collection of children's book illustrations, built up largely through the efforts of Louise P. Latimer, head of the children's department. Miss Latimer has collaborated in the compilation of a handsome survey of the field ("Illustrators of Children's Books, 1744-1945) published October 1 by the Horn Book, Inc., of Boston.

In connection with release of this publication, the Central Branch of the Public Library, 8th and K sts. nw. is showing until Wednesday a series of children's book illustrations from the collection. Included are Darley's line drawings for "Rip Van Winkle," silhouettes by Winslow Homer, works by contemporary Americans. Blake's illustrations for "Songs of Innocence" are shown, and illustrations by Kate Greenaway (whom Ruskin admired), among many more of past and present, and from various countries.

THE Division of Graphic Arts of the Smithsonian is showing until October 26 a small group of wood-engravings by Letterio Calapai, including several from the artist's portfolio of prints comprising the Negro Bible. An original illustrator, with "bold pattern and incisive cutting", his style is well suited to book illustration.



Letterio Calapai wood engraving at Graphic Arts Division of the Smithsonian

Opening this week, in addition to shows already announced, is a juried show by members of the Artists Cooperative, 1820 M st. nw., and a two-man exhibit of recent work by William Calfee and Pietro Lazzari at the new Bush and Weeks Gallery, 2010 S st. nw.

Walter A. Carnelli, mural and easel painter, who taught at King-Smith School last season, is the most recent addition to the faculty of the Washington Workshop. He will hold Friday afternoon classes in painting.

CHICAGO'S Art Institute is going all out for abstraction and surrealism this season. Its fifty-eighth annual American Exhibition, to be held from November 6 to January 11, will be the most extensive and concentrated display of work by Americans in these two categories to be held by any museum.

The institute sent its staff out on a wide hunt, visiting 76 cities and towns, in search primarily of new material. Painters and sculptors will be represented, and it is claimed that at least one third of the artists have never exhibited in any public museum or gallery.

Since abstraction and surrealism have to date been considered more the province of European than American artists, this project is of considerable interest.

THE DISTRICT LINE

By Bill Gold

We recently printed a rather humorous lament from a laundryman who wondered whether anybody had ever lost an article that wasn't "his newest, or his best."

Comes now an answer from K. W. B. of 3604 11th st. nw.:

"Don't let that laundryman kid you. He knows most articles aren't 'lost'—they're stolen.

"I make that statement on the strength of what I've been told by a friend who manages a local laundry.

"And it seems logical. Why should any person take a torn shirt, or a faded spread, when new ones are available?

"By way of supporting evidence, how's this:

"The first time I sent a pair of hand-embroidered, hand-crocheted pillow slips to the laundry, both disappeared. Not one, but both. Coincidence?"

NOT GUILTY

Bertha Malhmood of 1023 Otis pl. nw. thought she'd caught us in a typographical error, and for a while I was afraid she was right.

In reporting a speech by the FBI's J. Edgar Hoover, we quoted a reference to "soft headed parole boards." The question arose whether Hoover said "soft headed" or "soft hearted."

So I checked back to the original text of the speech, in the FBI files. It's "soft headed," and the head G-man says that's exactly what he meant.

ADD SIGNS

On a country road near Lebanon (Pa.) Florence T. Bosworth of 811 8th st. ne., encountered this sign, on the porch of a small house:

"Positively! No tying."

BACKFIRE

"Please don't print my name," writes I. A. B., "because I hate to be kidded." (Who doesn't?)

"Remember that item you printed about the fellow who tore up a parking ticket and the mystery was solved when you saw he had a New York license?

"I remembered it when I was in New York, and thought I'd even the score.

"But now the New York authorities say they're going to get my District driver's license revoked."

Can they do such a thing? How about it, you legal experts?

PET PEEVE

Esther S. Aiken of 8511 Irving-ave., Bethesda, Md., says that her pet peeve is directed against the radio announcer who signs off with:

"Until tomorrow at this same time, this is John Doe."

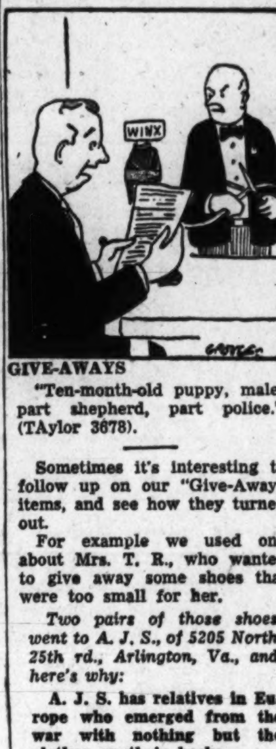
Mrs. Aiken muses, "Who will he be after tomorrow?"

In radio, Mrs. Aiken, one never knows from one day to the next. It's the industry which invented the 15-minute contract, with 5-minute options.

'TAINT FUNNY, O'C

The abrupt halt of "Post Preview" when the equipment failed Wednesday night has given the listeners a wonderful opportunity to kid me. W. M. O'C. writes:

"If WINX has appointed a vice-president-in-charge-of-fading-you, the station is wasting its time. Fred Allen got a lot of publicity by being cut off, but his jokes are funny."



GIVE-AWAYS

"Ten-month-old puppy, male, part shepherd, part police." (TAylor 3678).

Sometimes it's interesting to follow up on our "Give-Away" items, and see how they turned out.

For example we used one about Mrs. T. R., who wanted to give away some shoes that were too small for her.

Two pairs of those shoes went to A. J. S., of 5205 North 25th rd., Arlington, Va., and here's why:

A. J. S. has relatives in Europe who emerged from the war with nothing but the clothes on their backs.

So our District Liner has been on the lookout for cast-offs for them, and has supplemented such contributions with his own funds whenever possible.

If you have any clothing or bedding that you don't need, A. J. S. will gladly call for them if you'll dial Owens 5033.

PULEEEZE!

Henry M. Lesser of 5921 14th st. nw, knows a young fellow who is not only against lengthening women's skirts, but wants them shorter. Henry wonders what I think about that.

If some of them were shortened, Henry, they'd have to be worn as neckerchiefs.

It Plays the Field

New Ford Theater Program Goes on Air Waves Today

"THE FORD THEATER," which opens this afternoon at 5 over WRC-NBC, will be the fourth hour-long dramatic series now on the air. Lux Radio Theater, which rehashes motion pictures for the most part, is a WTOP-CBS Monday night feature which has always had a high Hooper rating.

"Theater Guild of the Air," broadcast Sunday nights over WMAL-ABC, tailors famous stage plays to its measure.

"Studio One," which is heard over WTOP-CBS Tuesdays, browses among books and plays for its script-inspirations.

But "The Ford Theater," which will have Howard Lindsay as narrator and emcee, will play hide-and seek in all the literary fields including original radio scripts. Dramatically inclined short stories, musicals, plays, novels and motion pictures will have to give way twice in each 13-week cycle of the series to original scripts.

"Ford Theater" will accept outlines of originals and will notify the sender if the producer is interested in seeing the finished play.

This is the first market radio writers have had for 60-minute original dramatic scripts.

The most popular of the plays presented will be aired again throughout the years the show is expected to continue.

"Names" will not be used. The cast will be drawn from among New York's talented radio actors.

The one "name" is Lindsay and his has an aura of smart showmanship around it. Coauthor and star of the fabulous "Life With Father," he also coauthored with Russell Crouse "Arsenic and Old Lace," "Anything Goes," and the Pulitzer Prize-winning "State of the Union."

Today's presentation will be Mark Twain's "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court," adapted by Lillian Schoen.

How to Get Rid Of That Salesman

There's more than one way to skin a cat and to get rid of a book salesman, too. Wyllis Cooper, who kills people weekly with his pen on "Quiet Please" (WOL-Mutual, Wednesdays) got a persistent encyclopedia salesman off his mind by changing him into a dog in one of his scripts.

Unfortunately, he also had to buy the books to make the matter permanent.

At N. Y. Galleries

Recently on view in New York galleries have been these shows: Water colors by Stanley Wilson, at Knoedler's; by Ruth Van Sickle Ford, at the Grand Central Galleries; and by a group of contemporary Americans, at the Downtown; work of the Brooklyn Museum faculty at the Norlyst; painting, sculpture and design for the modern house, at Bertha Schaefer's.

The Washington Philatelist

Mail Order Sales Being Speeded Up

By William M. Stuart

COLLECTORS may rest assured that the Postoffice Department is sincere in its announcement that the 1938 issue of ordinary stamps, sometimes called the "Presidential Series," will be placed on sale again shortly.

Owing to lack of clerical help, it became necessary for the Philatelic Agency to curtail stamp sales. At present, only new issues of commemorative and air mail stamps are for sale. Under present conditions it may require as much as 60 days to ship on order though counter sales are not restricted.

Meanwhile sales at the agency continue to grow, indicating increasing interest in United States stamps. Long delays in filling mail orders are unfortunate, but the agency is endeavoring to speed up its work. The collector should realize that the department is doing the best it can with a restricted budget.

Roosevelt Stamp Dropped

THE 3-cent Roosevelt Memorial stamp issued in 1945 has been removed from sale at the Philatelic Agency, as well as the 1945 $1 migratory bird or hunting stamp.

There are now 19 commemorative stamps on the list and the 3-cent "Constitution" will be added October 22. The 1945 stamps on sale, all 3-cent, are: Iwo Jima, Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Alfred E. Smith and Texas Statehood; issued in 1946, all 3-cent except 5-cent Roosevelt Memorial: Merchant Marine, Discharge Emblem, Tennessee, Iowa Statehood, Smithsonian and Kearny; in 1947, all 3-cent except 15-cent souvenir sheet: Edison, Pulitzer, Centenary of Stamps, Doctors and Utah. There are 14 air mails, including both the regular and large-size 5-cent red dominations.

The 3-cent "Constitution," to be released October 21 at Charlestown Navy Yard, Boston, on the 150th anniversary of the launching of "Old Ironsides," will be printed in sheets of 50, the size of the special delivery stamp.

Air mail cover collectors will be interested in the announcement of the Civil Aeronautics Board that a foreign air carrier permit has been granted the China National Aviation Corp. for the carrying of mail between Shanghai and San Francisco via Honolulu. This airline was selected by the Republic of China to establish international air service between China and the United States.

Collectors Face Crackdown

THE Third Postmaster General's office again calls attention to the fact that it does not service first-day covers, nor does the Philatelic Agency or any other division of the department. Postmasters are asked to give publicity to the fact that only postoffices where first-day sales are to be held handle first-day cover cancellations.

At recent first-day sales, even the office of the Postmaster General has been flooded with letters and packages for first-day service. As practically all of these requests are from collectors, the department at any time may take drastic measures and return every letter, thus preventing first-day cancellations simply through delay.

Postmasters have been cautioned not to place the Constitution stamp on sale before October 22. Some stamps on recent first-day sale were sold before release.

Salvador Honors Artists

SALVADOR has issued two new stamps honoring famous patriots. A 12-centavos, brown, bears a likeness of Felipe Soto, whose waltzes are known the world over.

Mexico has issued five air mails and seven regular postage stamps. It was a century ago that Mexico was defeated at Chapultepec, and the new stamps honor the heroes who fought in that battle. The air mails are 25, 30 and 50 cents, 1 and 5 pesos. The regular postage denominations are 2, 5, 10, 15 and 30 cents, 1 and 5 pesos.

The Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., met Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, President Ellery Denison presiding. Among the visitors present were Edward J. Goetz of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Robert F. Heubach of Philadelphia, Pa. The bourse was unusually busy and members received new circuit books filled with both United States and foreign material. At the meeting on Tuesday evening, in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw. an auction will be the program of the evening.

The Silver Spring Philatelic Society will meet Thursday evening in the board room of the county building. Collectors in that vicinity are invited to attend. This new organization is building a firm philatelic society and has a membership list that is steadily growing.

How Workers Learn Anew

PAINT POWER

Robert Barry (at blackboard), supervisor of ratings and promotions for the Hecht Co. conducts a class in salesmanship for a group of Washington paint dealers. The class is part of the distributive education program of the District schools

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

THE DISTRICT public schools are reaching out of the classroom into offices and stores to improve the skills of the employed.

Last year, under the distributive eduuation program, 3000 waitresses received training.

This year, department store executives, milkmen, telephone solicitors and grocers will be going to school.

Already in class are a group of Washington paint dealers.

Store executives will be taught methods of supervising employes, human relations, job instruction and personality development. Milkmen will be learning how to increase their door-to-door sales, and telephone solicitors ways to sell over the phone. Grocers will be taught methods of keeping stock and how to improve their bookkeeping.

Future courses will include one for shoe salesmen in fitting shoes, another for the department store sales girl in fashions.

Insurance men have expressed an interest in a class on salesmanship.

Hired Away From Arlington

HEAD of distributive education in the District is Miss Ethel Pendleton Edwards, a young educator from Virginia who was hired away from the Arlington schools this year to step up the local program.

She sees distributive education as cutting down the cost of consumer goods by increasing the efficiency of distributors. The program also provides training needed by young men and women for advancement in buying and selling fields, she believes.

"The acute shortage of competent people in selling has passed," she points out. "The employer now is able to take a more thoughtful, more selective attitude toward his staff."

Classes are set up by the public schools at the request of either employers or employes. They are held in busibusiness offices rather than schools. Teachers hired and payed by the public schools generally are retailers rather than educators. Instead of delivering lectures they conduct conferences.

The course for paint dealers, for example, is held at the headquarters of the National Paint, Varnish and Lacquer Association and is taught by Robert Barry, supervisor of ratings and promotions at the Hecht Co. The salesmen meet each Monday for a two-hour session.

A local dairy has requested lessons in salesmanship for its milkmen and three department stores are asking for classes in fashion and textiles as well as the course for executives.

Aim at 3-Level Program

EVENTUALLY the schools will have a three-level program for department store employes and will grant diplomas to graduates. In addition to the course for executives there will be one for department heads and buyers and another for salesmen and stock clerks.

Miss Edwards trained for her job at Lynchburg College and the graduate school of William and Mary Extension in Richmond. As an employe of the training and personnel department of Thalhimers Department Store in Richmond, she worked in 152 of its 155 departments. She was coordinator for distributive education in Richmond schools before transferring to Arlington where she held a similar job.

British Schoolboys Still Get Switched

By Robert Musel

LONDON, October 4 (U.P.).—Many a schoolboy burns up when he thinks of the Corpun Educational Society.

In Britain's efforts to educate its youth from all sides the CES has a prominent side—the backside.

For a fleeting moment a week or so ago it appeared that the dollar crisis had saved countless lads, from the high-collared blue bloods of Eton to the rough and ready boys of the council schools, from "assuming the angle."

But the CES through its young president, Eric Wildman, 26, announced it had managed to locate six months supplies of canes, birch rods, punishment straps and wooden spanking paddles somewhere in the sterling area.

Satisfaction Guaranteed

"SPARE the rod and spoil the child," quoted Wildman, pointing today to the "Koo Boo Processed Corporal Punishment Cane" (price $4 per dozen). He added, "This cane is guaranteed to give satisfaction." But he didn't say to whom.

Then he explained that he formed Corpun (corporal punishment—get it?) because he believes in the traditional British system of chastising schoolboys and others with light or heavy flicks of a stick.

Pride of Wildman's establishment, and he sells several hundred punishment sticks a month, is the "Three Star Selected Cane"—flawfree, a 36-inch cane with glace cord grip handle and loop in five colors—green, white, yellow, red or blue—of exceptional quality at three for 10s 6d ($2.10).

Has Spanking Export Trade

HE ALSO does a spanking trade in the "Special 12-Inch Tawse with two, three or four tails, cut from medium-weight, supple leather."

At the moment he is worried about the Committee for the Abolition of Corporal Punishment in Schools. He says he is throwing his support behind the National Society for the Retention of Corporal Punishment in Schools.

"Business is quite good now," he said. "But for a while there it was touching bottom."

School Test Urged to Equip Young People

By Ben Gallob

Detroit, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—The vast majority of young people are failing completely to acquire the information they need about themselves to make a wise choice of their life work, according to a Detroit expert.

Richard Dresher, administrative assistant in the guidance and placement department of the Detroit Board of Education, says that only two out of 45 young persons of high school age in Detroit—less than 5 per cent—take advantage of the department's testing service.

"Nobody in the testing field argues that the system of vocational testing is an infallible guide," Dresher said, "but there isn't much doubt that it is a good deal better than choosing an occupation just because it is the smart thing to do or because a good friend of yours has chosen it."

Cites Public Ignorance

Dresher said the problem was the result only partly of general public ignorance of the wide variety of modern testing techniques.

The test given an applicant by the department covers four general fields: achievement, intelligence, interests and mechanical culture, mathematics, literary comprehension, science, social problems, vocabulary, manual dexterity, various intelligence measurements, personality and others.

Dresher explained that the testing was only part of the program. A counselor sits down with the applicant after the tests are completed and analyzes the applicant's ideas about a job choice in the light of the findings.

If the young person has the qualifications for a professional job, it is the counselor's task not only to tell him so but to point out the handicaps to success.

Tests Expensive

Testing and counseling are fairly expensive, although the department has broken it down to an average cost of about $10 per person.

It is up to the parents to find out what testing facilities are available in the school systems in their cities and to demand the best services available, Dresher said. He added it would be a good idea first for the parents to learn a little about the subject themselves.

"Once a woman called up and wanted us to find out in about an hour all the things she hadn't learned herself in 18 years with her child."

Agency's 'Toot' Fund Goes to Charities

Something new and very nice has been added to advertising agency-press relations.

Instead of throwing a convivial but useless cocktail party for the press in honor of the Lowell Thomas news show on CBS, the Compton Advertising Agency earmarked the $1000 that would have been spent, for charities designated by radio editors invited "not to come" to the party which didn't occur.

School Children Are 'Reconverted'

San Francisco, Oct. 4 (AP).—San Francisco school teachers conclude that pupils have all been reconverted to peacetime childhood, complete with zoos.

"They no longer draw Japanese Zeroes going down, or men parachuting," says Miss Doris Sinclair, kindergarten teacher. "They still draw planes and they still play war, but not with the vengeance that children did in war years.

All teachers agree that childhood art is back to pictures of people without uniforms and houses without bombs falling on them.

Miss Elizabeth Chapman said her beginning first graders this fall seemed "more worldly," perhaps because parents traveled more in wartime. Miss Sinclair said parents still must be taking children around more, because "they all know what I mean when I talk about parks and zoos."

Teachers agreed that the warborn babies are as healthy as any other crop, and much more numerous.

Air 'Union Station' Will Help Traveling

By Charles Corddry

WILLOW RUN, Mich., Oct. 4 (U.P.).—Here at the world's largest commercial airport, where not long ago Henry Ford was building bombers, the airlines are trying a radical cooperative experience, a union station of the air age.

A gigantic chunk of the former bomber plant here is being turned into a terminal bordering on the fantastic. Inside, and out on the two long ramps where 20 four-engine transports can load at once, the same employes work for all the airlines serving nearby Detroit.

Fancy uniforms and individualistic ticket booths, distinctive loading steps and ground crews that sit idle except when their line's planes are in—all have been dispensed with.

Costs $1,000,000

THE AIRPORT, leased from the University of Michigan, which acquired it from the War Assets Administration, is run by the Airlines National Terminal Services Corp., an organization set up by the presidents of the scheduled airlines. It cost $500,000 in stock subscriptions, and another $500,000 borrowed from a bank, to get under way.

In another 60 to 90 days the terminal will be complete, Roy Callahan, corporation president, said in an interview, and then this is what will greet passengers:

The waiting room will dwarf any they ever saw. Arriving by express bus or limousine, they will enter through either of two massive doors. Immediately beyond the doors will be beauty parlors, barber shop, haberdasheries, coffee shop and all manner of other concessions.

On one side will be a newsreel theater and a postoffice. On the second floor will be a cocktail lounge, providing arrangements can be made in a "dry" county.

Along the wall facing the ramps, already functioning, is the ticket counter. Here there are no long lines before one airline's booth while another line's employes remain idle. All ticket agents work for all the airlines, except for Eastern Air Lines, which still maintains its own box. A huge board shows when arrivals and departures are scheduled. An attractive girl works the board and supplements its information with verbal announcements broadcast throughout the terminal.

Two Main Questions

IN ONE SECTION will be the customers and immigration officers, expediting international travelers through a separate door to the ramps.

Two main questions arise: Will the cooperative work and will it pay?

Callahan and Harold Parker, airport manager, think both answers will be yes. Callahan says within a reasonable time savings to the airlines probably will amount to 33 per cent . He already begins to fore see reduction in the number of employes, now 460, including everyone from janitors to the front office

"We are going to teach people to do a five-minute job in five minutes instead of 20 minutes," Callahan puts it.

Running their own show on a "business basis" might be the better idea, airline presidents figured.

Callahan said landing fees here already are about half what they are in Chicago and in 18 to 24 months the corporation will break even on them. Maintenance and passenger handling cost the seven airlines serving the port just what it costs the corporation.

The airlines operating into the 1900-acre airport, where the shortest runway is 6363 feet long, are American, United, Transcontinental and Western Air, Eastern, Chicago and Southern, Pennslyvania-Central and Northwest.

They have, combined, about 130 schedules a day. Last month the airport handled 8402 flight operations of all kinds.

Children's Hospital Benefit Play Set

By Marian H. Barre

A TWO-SESSION tournament to benefit Children's Hospital will be held next Saturday under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary of the Washington Bridge League, play beginning at 2 p. m. in Hotel Burlington. Starting time of the evening round will be announced from the floor.

Trophy for the tournament is the Schwartz Charity Cup, donated by Mrs. Dora Schwartz and won in 1946 by W. S. Benedict and John Moore, who expect to defend it.

The Auxiliary met on September 27 and voted that the Damon Runyon Cancer Fund be adopted as "Cause of the Month." At the duplicate game following the meeting, master point winners north-south were Mrs. John Fletcher and Mrs. J. V. Waits; Mrs. Mary Goodstein and Mrs. H. L. Surkin, east-west.

THE ANNUAL District of Columbia Championships, which open October 16 and continue for four days, will have two daily sessions and six D. C. titles in competition.

Current holders of the Washington Bridge League's sterling silver trophies are—Ira Haygooni and Edward Pierson, Baltimore, the Woodward Cup; Leroy Thurtell, Washington, R. L. Miles, jr., Norfolk; Mrs. J. E. Folline, Richmond, Irvin Fisher, Baltimore, and Wallace Jones, another Virginian, in the intercity team holding the Eynon Bowl; Mrs. Frederick Eberson-C. C. Johnson, D. C. holders of the Capital Cup; Mrs. Rebecca Crane-Miss Mary Ruhl, Washington, Evening Star Trophy; Mrs. Haygooni-Mrs. W. Marriott, Baltimore, Columbia Trophy; Willion Million-J. R. McGhee; also of this city, the President's Cup.

Team of four play will be resumed in the Washington Bridge League on Wednesday at 8:15 p. m. in Hotel Burlington. Winners in the last foursome match in September were Boschan-Eberson-Poissant-Stone, with a board and a half lead over Steinberg-Steinberg-Benedict-King. In the pair section the same night, Mrs. Marian H. Barre-J. R. McGhee had the north-south top, east-west going to Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Lingley.

The Federal Bridge League also resumes team play Tuesday at 8 p. m. in Pierce Hall. During the fortnight interval caused by the master-point contest for pairs standing of teams remained stationary with Victory first, Redskins second, and Emperes third. Winning line-ups in each section (the Federal, like ancient Gaul, being divided into three parts) were as follows: a tie in Section A between Victory and Redskins; another tie in Section B between Emperes and Mixed Party; in Section C, the Allies.

"FUNNY COINCIDENCE DEPARTMENT (squeeze division)" in the New Yorker lists in parallel columns extracts from the late Louis H. Watson's book on "Play of the Hand at Contract Bridge," copyright 1934, and from "Better Bridge for Better Players," by Charles H. Goren, copyright 1942. Explanations of the same plays are thus contrasted, showing a notable similarity in phrasing. This coincidence is not so remarkable, since Watson and Goren were former partners. In "Author's Note" in "Better Bridge" Goren acknowledges his debt to Watson

Season prizes were awarded at the Capital City Chess Club last week for several duplicate series concluded in September. James G. Stone received the point-award in the Saturday series, W. M. Lingley, the corresponding Sullivan Memorial award for members. Results of the Thursday night games were not completed in time for this column. Upon the completion of each series, the club immediately embarks upon a new contest, first games of which were played on Thursday and Saturday.

The D. C. Recreation Department announces the opening of a beginner's bridge class, under the direction of Mirabel Rusher, at Roosevelt Center, 13th and Upshur sts., nw. The class will be held every Tuesday at 7:30 p. m., beginning on Tuesday. For further information telephone ADams 2050.

Seaboard Offering $500 for Train Name

The Seaboard line is seeking a name for its new streamliner. A prize of $500 will be awarded to the person who submits a name selected as most suitable for the new train. Entrants will submit a name and write a composition in 50 words or less, telling why the name was submitted. Deadline for entries is October 10.

There's Never a Dull Moment At 'Ellis Island' for Animals

A camel arrives at U. S. Quarantine Station and, with a little urging, is unloaded

By Albert S. Fulling

CLIFTON, N. J., Oct. 4 (AP).—The "Ellis Island of the animal kingdom"—a combination three-ring circus and exclusive dairy—is back to "normal" again after wartime interruption.

But "normal" at the United States animal quarantine station here is not a dull routine.

Through the stalls on the 52-acre tract flow a continuous stream of quadrupeds. Bulls worth $15,000 each warily eye jittery antelopes, and $10,000 cows give birth to $1000 calves.

Deer, red buffalo, wild swine, sheep and other animals make up the ever-changing guest list, which includes 95 per cent of the cloven-hoofed animals received from abroad in the United States.

Dr. Truman W. Cole, inspector in charge, says that although most of the visitors are somewhat tamed by their long trip by water and preshipment waiting periods, there are exceptions.

Camels and giraffes, for instance. To make them stoop down and enter one of the station's stalls requires a lot of patience, it seems. They cannot be roped and pulled through, so food is the one logical lure. It works, Dr. Cole says.

He Wanted Out

BUT there was the time an impala, a large African antelope, jumped out of its stall through a window 6 feet from the ground, tearing out the frame as it went. Dr. Cole and a helper caught the animal in the paddock before it could vault the boundary fence.

A large, high-priced bull from the Isle of Jersey once bawled continuously from the time it arrived. Authorities wired the shipper, reported his actions and asked for advice.

The answer was simple. The bull was lonesome. Seems he had been in the habit of having company on either side of him in his stall. A home-like atmosphere was created quickly and quiet was resumed.

Another time, a pack of dogs broke into the station and destroyed five pure-bred sheep before police could disperse them.

Dr. Cole, who arrived in the station in 1944, said he considered an apt motto for the place to be "He who cures a disease may be the most skillful physician, but he who prevents it is the safest physician."

Sometimes 30 Days

FOUNDED in 1900 to prevent the transmission of diseases from incoming cattle to native United States herds, the station keeps imported beasts under observation for a minimum of 15 days before they are sent to their final destinations—farms, ranches, zoological parks and exhibits. Cattle often stay 30 days before the tests are completed.

Sometimes disease breaks out in the station. In such cases entire shipments of expensive animals may have to be destroyed. In 1906, surra was found in a herd of sacred Indian cattle. All were destroyed to prevent an epidemic.

A camel shipment in 1923 was slaughtered when a form of venereal disease broke out.

"Ours is a real blue-blooded outfit," Dr. Cole said. All of the Jersey and Guernsey cattle, which arrive in the spring from islands off the coast of England, are prize animals. Bulls range in value from $5000 to $15,000, while cows run from $3000 to $10,000.

Last year, 20 calves were born in a cattle shipment, and each was worth $1000 at birth.

Two Famed N. Y. Hotels Mark Anniversaries

NEW YORK, Oct. 4 (U.P.).—This has been the fortieth anniversary week of the famous Hotel Plaza. There have been changes, of course, since it was opened on the last day of September, 1907, but perhaps more than any other spot in New York it retains that flavor of genteel, expensive living to which it was dedicated.

"The elite of the town attended the opening," said Romeo Giannini, bell captain, who has worked at the Plaza ever since it was opened. "I remember paging Mark Twain and Diamond Jim Brady. James K. Hackett came in, and Harry Lehr, Lillian Russell, Mrs. Pat Campbell, Charles Dillingham, Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, and John Drew were just a few of the others."

The hotel's books show that first day registrants included Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. George Gould, C. K. G. Billings, Mrs. Oliver Harriman, John W. (Bet-a-Million) Gates, Col. William Jay and Mrs. Jay and Clara Bell Walsh, who has been a resident of the hotel ever since that opening day.

The Plaza's historians maintain that it was the opening of this hostelry that set the fashion for the wealthy to acquire hotel suites for their town homes. Prior to that hotels were strictly for transients. If built today the Plaza would cost many times its then astounding price of 12 million dollars.

The famous Astor Hotel passed its forty-third birthday last month.

Just a year ago there were reports that the hostelry was going to be sold at once, but they were squelched by such emphatic denials that nothing has been heard about the matter since.

This Times Square landmark, in fact, has had such a successful season on its summertime roof that the roof was kept open about three weeks longer than usual.

Courtesy Seen as Traffic Aid

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 4 (U.P.).—An Atlantan who decided to do something about his city's traffic problems has returned from a personal survey of once-congested cities across the country convinced that motorist "courtesy" is the No. 1 solution.

L. L. Collier went to St. Louis, Mo., Oklahoma City, Okla., and Memphis and Nashville, Tenn. He found traffic officials in all cities agreed that traffic flow is expedited by putting each motorist on his own.

This, according to Collier, is how "motorist courtesy" works:

First motorist to the intersection has the crossing right-of-way. This means that the second motorist must extend the courtesy and not try to race him across.

During rush hours, St. Louis policemen are stationed at the intersections. They let traffic flow in one direction as long as it seems feasible and are not hampered by lights.

Collier said motorist courtesy played the biggest part in solving traffic difficulties in Oklahoma City. There was no horn-blowing, no racing for lights, no trying to cheat on others.

In St. Louis, he said, motorist courtesy had even supplanted the traffic light in downtown sections. And in Memphis—where motorists are forbidden to honk their horns in traffic—and Nashville, he said, he saw no dodging or cutting ahead and, best of all, no impatience in the driver's seat.

Improved Colombian Port Crowds Tiny Pacific Island

HARBOR improvements now in progress promise trade and population increases for Tumaco, island port town on Colombia's Pacific coast near the border with Ecuador.

Large ocean freighters will for the first time tie up to new wharves lined with modern warehouses when dredging and construction are complete. Overflow shipping from Buenaventura to the north will make use of the improved port.

But Tumaco has no room to grow. Thatch-roof houses built on stilts crowd its site, a low, palm-studded island that becomes nearly half submerged at each high tide. Tumaco's "suburb" on the mainland, already started, will take the expansion.

The tropical town 125 miles north of the Equator, has 3000 residents, many being descendants of Negro slaves. Its port grew as the outlet for the Department of Narino, shipping gold, platinum, coffee, cacao and nuts from the tagua palms of the rain-drenched tropical forests along the coast. Tagua nuts provide "vegetable ivory" for button-making.

Tumaco early developed as the port, of Colombia's gold-mining town of Barbacoas. Since 1680 the gold from this mountainous area 50 miles inland, has moved down the Patia River to the island port. Pirate raids enlivened Tumaco's early history.

A wagon road reaching beyond Barbacoas to Pasto made Tumaco the port for that town's population of 28,000, mostly Indians. Enthroned on a plateau elevation of 8400 feet, Pasto rules the Department of Narino as its capital. The Pan American Highway now runs through the town.

Tumaco has better served the needs of Narino since the building of the 65-mile railroad inland to Diviso. Combinations of river, road, and railway are common routings for shipments to the coast from Colombia's mountainous interior.
